Taft Doesn't Like Labor Appointment

CINCINNATI, O. — Sen. Robert A. Taft said today the appointment of Martin P. Durkin as secretary of labor was an "affront" to union members who voted as they chose.

The leader of the Senate Republican policy committee in his first public disapproval of President-elect Eisenhower's cabinet appointments called Durkin's selection "an incredible appointment."

The senator in a statement said that in talks with Herbert Brownell "a key man in cabinet appointments" he had "made several recommendations of qualified men" for the labor post.

Durkin's appointment, Taft said "is an affront to millions of union members and officers who had the courage to defy the edict of officials like Mr. Durkin that they vote for Stevenson."

TRUMAN PARTISAN
Durkin, a registered Democrat in Chicago, supported Gov. Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic presidential candidate, in the campaign against Eisenhower.

"It was never suggested," the co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act said, "that a man would be appointed who has always been a partisan of Truman Democrats, who fought Gen. Eisenhower's election, and advocated the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law."

Taft had expressed general approval of Eisenhower's appointments until today. However, he had said that the appointment of Ezra Taft Benson to be secretary of agriculture was the only one of the appointments announced at that time in which he had "joined" in recommendation.

Air Force Chief Cites Position

WASHINGTON — Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg said today that the Air Force does not have enough reserve strength in Korea to fight a war of larger scope than the current conflict.

The Air Force chief of staff said at a news conference that the Air Force is stronger than it was a year ago.

But if a decision were made to expand the Korean war, he said, the Air Force would have to transfer units to the Far East from other important areas.

"Now we are in a much better position if the policy of the United States should involve the use of the Air Force somewhere other than Korea," Vandenberg said.

"But when you stick your head into a hornet's nest you must have something to back it up."

"The back-up over there is surely not enough for an enlarged scope of war."

NOT HAPPY YET

Vandenberg recently made a tour of U. S. air bases around the world. He said he is "not completely happy yet" about Air Force strength but is not "alarmed."

He said the Communist air force in Korea outnumbered U. S. planes three to one. And, he added, the number of Russian-built Ilushin-28 jet light bombers to their Far East forces.

Vandenberg said the U. S. Air Force has destroyed all really worthwhile targets in North Korea except lines of communication. He said air power is now being used to supplement the artillery.
