Star's Autograph In Windsors Home

GIF-SUR-YVETTE, France — The signature of Mistinguett, once possessor of France's most beautiful legs, will decorate the new home of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor.

The 17th century water-mill, Moulin Aubert, in this tiny village, 25 miles southwest of Paris, will be ready for the royal couple when they return in March from the United States.

Extensive renovation and repairs now in their final stages will leave untouched the drawing room wall autographed by top French music hall stars of the past 50 years. They include Mistinguett and many other stage celebrities.

The names had been collected by the mill's owner, the painter George Drian, who leased it to Britain's former monarch on a long-term contract.

The Duke, who also has an option to buy the property on the picturesque little Yvette river, has said he may make it his permanent home.

The village, proud of its new celebrity resident, paved the road to the mill so the Duke's automobiles would not bog down.

Normal Teenager Rebels At Authority

Ann ARBOR, Mich. — If your teenager thinks more of his friends' ideas than he does of your opinions, don't worry, he's only normal.

That advice for parents comes from Willard C. Olson, dean of the University of Michigan school of education.

An apparent lack of parental importance is only a sign that an adolescent is learning to adapt himself to some difficult transitions, Olson said. He added that, if parents realized this they would help him over those tough hurdles of adjustment.

Olson said this phase of denying authority to parents and teachers is often manifested in extremes in behavior and dress.

Boys and girls who stay with "the gang" throughout adolescence are usually among the slow growers and the less privileged, he added. Children who mature more rapidly and have better social environment move out of the gang earlier.

"But few escape altogether," Olson concluded.
