Liquor Bill

Similar referendum bills have been killed off in committee in past sessions but referendum advocates see a better chance of getting a bill to the floor this session.

A host of representatives from schools, colleges, training schools and hospitals appeared before the Joint Appropriations Committee yesterday and asked for almost $5,000,000 more in biennial budget funds than has been recommended by the Advisory Budget Commission.

North Carolina College at Durham wanted the most—$3,783,172 for permanent improvements and $112,600 for operation.

Dr. Alfonso Elder, president, told the committee that the college is attempting to enlarge its graduate facilities to take care of Negro students who otherwise would have to battle through lawsuits in attempts to enter the University of North Carolina.

Cross examination also revealed that, since the drowning, another child of the Brown family, has died from pneumonia. She denied specifically that Mr. Dudley ever asked the family to move. However, shortly after the accident, the Browns, she said, did move to "Tudington's Cross Roads."

Other witnesses heard earlier were George Falcloth, Herman T. Lucas and W. F. Hall.

Lucas, who has five children and lives within a half mile of the gravel pit, said he had seen children playing close to the water hole. On cross examination, he admitted he did not permit his younger children to go there.

Hall told the court he was very familiar with the gravel pit area, that he went there about three times a week to fish. He said he had been there ever since the pit was opened around 1938. At the time of the accident he lived in Baersville, but is now a resident of Erwin.

Mother

On cross examination by defense Attorney Neill Salmon the mother admitted she went to the spring for water, but that it was located in the opposite direction from the deep water hole where the child drowned.

ADMITTED WARNING

She testified that three weeks after they moved to the gravel pit W. P. Dudley, a caretaker of the idle plant who had given them permission to live in the small house there, had called her and warned her he saw her children playing around the water hole.

Mrs. Brown said she whipped the children and warned them not to go there.

He said he had seen children throw sticks in the water hole. The hole where the drowning occurred was once a well, dug to furnish water for an asphalt plant and an operation, the defense contends, directed by Adams and Tate construction company who leased the property from Superior Stone.

On cross examination, Hall was asked to name children he had seen at the pit and he replied, "The Brown children, Joe Dennis and the Lucas children."

Several other witnesses for the plaintiff are due to be heard this morning. The defense is expected to start its evidence this afternoon. Indications were that the trial of the case would require the remainder of the week.
