Hardship, Disaster Face Millions Of Farm Families

By UNITED PRESS Hardship or disester today faced millions of American farmers trying to make a crop in the face of drought, pestilence, falling market prices and damaging storms. In many aweas from the eastern slopes of the Rockies to the Alantic this was the worst farming year in two decades. In the dusty, parched Southwest 1985 became a new standard for measuring disaster. It was the worst year in the memory of many an old ploneer. Texas churches offered special prayers Sunday for rain. But in most areas it was too late, army worms that felled small rain like it had been moved and runned tender young corn and cloved the fourth year of almost uninterrupted drought.
