Harnett Man Invents New Tobacco Looper That Works

Cyrus McNeill, Broadway, Route 1 doesn't claim he is the only inventor in the nation who has put his brains to work on the problem of making an automatic tobacco looper.

But the well known Harnett County farmer and Upper Little River township constable — after seven years of work — has developed a field looper which can string a stick of tobacco in a minute and it is cheap to operate.

At present, two commercial companies after watching McNeill's looper in action want to build the machine. I. R. Williams of Dunn is McNeill's attorney representing his patent interests in a venture which, if successful on a wholesale scale, would bring fame and fortune to the inventor.

Chief advantage of the looper is that with the machine in the field it eliminates all help at the barn, now one of the chief seasonal expenses of the tobacco farmer.

FOUR MEN RUN IT

Four men run the looper which is mounted on wheels and operated with two small air cooled motors. McNeill built his looper from old automobile parts and other old machinery. Some few new parts and special castings were necessary to fit his specifications.

The model is self-propelled and driven from the rear. Low slung seat on each side at the front enable a man to prime tobacco while seated. Leaves are fed to the machine by hand, but all walking and back breaking labor is eliminated. The looper can be adjusted to place any amount of tobacco desired on the sticks.

Since his looper can crop two rows of tobacco at a time, McNeill's custom is to plant every other row four feet wide, giving the machine plenty of room for maneuver. McNeill insists his machine does less damage to the leaves than an average mule.

And if the looper is sold commercially "old dobbin," may soon be a thing of the past on the tobacco farm. The average mule these days vacation on the farm until the tobacco girls at 7:30.

Funeral services will be held at 4 p. m. tomorrow at Covenant Presbyterian Church here with burial at Elmwood Cemetery.

Services will be conducted by Dr. Warner Hall, pastor of the church; Dr. Ben R. Lacy, president of Union Theological Seminary of Richmond, Va. and Dr. John R. Cunningham, president of Davidson College.

Honorary pallbearers will include Umstead, former Gov. R. Gregg Cherry and W. Kerr Scott, and members of the Mecklenburg County Bar Association.

CAME UP HARD WAY

Morrison, whose father-never had enough money to send his boy to college, studied law in a Greensboro law office and was admitted to the bar in 1892. In 1893 he was elected mayor of Rockingham.

He then came to Charlotte to practice law and made his next venture into state politics in 1920 when he ran for governor against O. Max Gardner and Robert N. Page.

He defeated Gardner by 9,000 votes in a runoff and took office Jan. 12, 1921.

Morrison was soon dubbed "the good roads governor" after inducing the legislature to appropriate $55,000,000 for hard-surfaced roads, an unheard-of amount for that time. He was also the first governor to appoint a woman to a major post and launched a vigorous crusade against lynching and mob violence.

Under his administration, the General Assembly also abolished state ad valorem taxes and the poll tax as a requirement for voting, increased the income tax and appropriated $20,000,000 for health and education.

Morrison left office in 1925 and in 1928 was elected to the Demo-

for themselves.

With the Rev. Glenn H. Fishbeck, the minister, the people of Riverside Presbyterian Church are searching some of the remarkable statements of the Bible about the return of Jesus Christ. They recognize that we cannot believe any of the dates people have given for these future events, because God wisely chose to keep that from us. But they are discovering that the Bible reveals much relating to the future program of the Son of Man.

These services are each night through this week, including Saturday from 8 to 9 p. m., with the final study at 9:45 Sunday morning, August 23. Anyone interested is welcome to attend.

Sunday night it was seen that Christ will bring peace and justice to this earth which every other means has utterly failed to do. Monday night it was shown that prophetic statements are to be understood literally, and accepted as accurate, though care should be exercised in interpretation of what is obviously symbolic. Tuesday night several erroneous views were seen to be out of harmony with I. Thessalonians 4:14-17.

WEDNESDAY'S STUDY

The study for Wednesday night makes distinction between the Judgment Seat of Christ, which affects God's family only, and all other future judgments. The study for Thursday night is to show that from all over the world Jews will be brought to Palestine and the nation of Israel will enter into great earthly blessings by the second coming of their Messiah, our Lord Jesus. The study for Friday night is, Will The Church Go Through The Great Tribulation. The study for Saturday night is, Will There Be A Millennium? The congregation is enjoined to use their Bibles in these studies, examining each scripture cited, and see Authorities in the capital said today they will check the Jersey City incident to determine whether terms of probation were violated.
