Men More Reluctant — Men are more reluctant to accept anything new, said Leonard A. Rothgerber, Jr., director of the Men's Apparel Research Guild. "They won't be stampeded by fashion whims." Women will follow the dictates of high-priced dressmakers like Dior, Schiaparelli or Mainbocher, no matter how often they change their styles, Rothgerber said. "Men designers let a fellow wear a suit until it wears out," he added. Stanley Mitchell, of the Men's Modes Designing School, said that in time out of 10 marriages, the women are dressed so much better than the men that "it's not funny."

A man jumped to the defense of women on this score, however. Leonard Arkin, a well-known women's designer, said the fact women change style more often than men is a "tribute to their spirit of adventure." "They have an open mind about fashions and are willing to try something which may successfully help their appearance," Arkin said.

Mitchell and Rothgerber retorted that men accept changes in styles, too, but only when they don't unbalance their budgets. Changes are going on now, they said, and probably will be accepted universally by the time suits now in use have worn out. Suit shoulders are shrinking, jackets are becoming snugger and trouser legs are being taken in. Shirt collars are losing their points, ties are narrower and hats more tapered. "Men follow their own way of monkey see, monkey do in accepting such changes," Rothgerber said. "The major men's changes have been started by a relatively few men at top level and sifted down."

The polo coat started with polo players spread to Yale and Princeton and then was accepted by all men. Wide bottom trousers came from students at Oxford University and then the better Eastern schools. "Eventually the mass has accepted all these things and change has come. Every major change in the last 50 years has been motivated by comfort. Anyone who doubts that has been change should look at pictures of Abraham Lincoln and President Eisenhower. They show drastic changes, but they took a long time to develop."

Safe Driving Is Urged As School Opens — Cpl. Herbie Williamson of the State Highway Patrol, warned motorists today that with the opening of schools in Harnett County tomorrow, they should drive with care. Williamson said that thousands of children will be going to school on buses, cars, and bikes. Hundreds will also walk, he stated. Last year Harnett County reported no fatalities due to accidents with school buses, Williamson commented. "We would like to keep this record," he said. All school buses in the County have been inspected by members of the Highway Patrol staff, Williamson said, and were found to be in good mechanical order. Safety on the Harnett County Highways will be doubly important with the return of school children to classes, Williamson said. At bottom, the errant "Romeo" descends to the street after a plea by Mayor John O'Donnell (left).
