Those geraniums, she confessed, are really just early 19th Century, while the Brocksland setting is supposed to be the 17th Century. The Garden Club of America, a national group of amateur flower growers, went to the federated gar-den members one better by going all the way back to an Indian stockade as part of their historic setting. setting.

setting. Elaborate plans are carried out every year to duplicate natural settings for flowers inside the steel structure of a city building. There is a tropical garden com-plete with native grass hut; one watewfall and numerous rippling streams running through woodland ordens; a Dutch garden with ca-al and windmill, a bog garden and a garden made of volcanic rocks.

rocks. Roses, always the most abun-dant blossoms are brought in by the thousands by commercial green-houses. This year the rose growers even included a display to show the various ways a woman can wear roses as accessories to her cos-tume.
