DEFINING RELIGION

One good use to which our entire lives may be put is the seeking of an answer to the question: What is reli-

The first thing we must admit, it seems, is that actually everyone has a religion, a faith, a creed, of some kind. He may be unconscious of this religion, faith, or creed, or he may be conscious of it. The point is, everyone has it, conscious or unconscious, defined or not yet defined.

defined.

When we seek to define religion we find a great deal of confusion, for one person will say that religion in its essence consists of one thing and another person will say that in its essence it is something entirely different.

Thus it is not surprising that there is confusion over religion and that many people in digust turn away from religion altogether, or at least in its institutional forms. Yet all of us want to know more about religion, for religion, we know, deals with those questions that human beings want answers to. We know that there is something to man other than matter. We want to identify that beings want answers to. We know that there is something to man other than matter. We want to identify that "something" more adequately.

One reads many different definitions of religion. One significant religious thinker has said that it is "the union of the soul with God, a real participation of the divine nature, the very image of God drawn upon the soul." Another says, "To me religion is life before God and in God." Another says it, is, "a view of life taken on faith, that is, the ultimate premises by which one lives." Still another says that religion is "the love of God, the union of the spirit of man with holiness, the constant endeavor to do the best and beat' the worst." Albert Schweitzer says religion is essentially "reverence for life." For Thomas A.

ligion is essentially "reverence for life." For Thomas A. Kempis it was the "Imitation of Christ."

The Christian in attempting to define religion thinks first of Jesus, and, from him comes the clue to an adequate definition of religion, at least for the Christian Jesus, of course, never used the word religion. He used instead the word "Life." He said that He came that men might have life and have it more abundantly. We have yet to se what he really meant. Life can be "more abundant" through Him and in Him, but we do not really be-

One help to a definition of religion, for the Christian, is found in the Book of Common Prayer, in a prayer that asks God to, "Grant unto all those who are admitted into the fellowship of Christ's Religion, that they may avoid those things that are contrary to their profession, and follow all such things as are agreeable to the same." When follow all such things as are agreeable to the same." When we learn what it is, what things are agreeable to our profession as Christians, then we will have defined our religion adequately. The petition stated above is preceded by the words, "Almighty God, who showest to them that are in error the light of thy truth...", thus giving us the ultimate source of a definition of religion, "Almighty God." Perhaps we will have to turn to Him and really seek to "know" Him, before we can really "know" any real and meaningful and satisfying and restorious definition of religion.

Class Is Held

Staff Sgt. Jack Lang of the Air Defense Command's filter center in Durham on Monday night taught the first of a series of classes designed to assist volun-teers in the Ground Observer Corps in Lillington.

classes designed to assist volunteers in the Ground Observer Corps in Lillington.

Sergeant Lang spoke at the Community Center and illustrated his remarks with two films. One was an authentic army film of an atomic explosion made at tests in Nevada. The other was a fictionized version of what would happen in event a city of the size of New York City was bombed.

Miss Adelaide Shaw, vice president of the Lillington Business and Professional Women's Club which is sponsoring the classes, presided and introduced Sergeant Lang. Around 30 persons attended, including members of the Boy Scouts and their assistant scoutmaster, A. J. Jackson and Joe Hudson. Mr. and R. N. Sessoms, who are in charge of the Ground Observation post in Lillington, were also recognized.

The next training class will be conducted Monday, March 29, at 7:30 p.m. at the Community Center. All interested adults in the community are urged to attend the civilian defense classes.
