

Off-Duty Club Entertained By Mrs. W. E. Ryals

Lovely bouquets of mixed garden flowers decorated the home of Mrs. W. E. Ryals for the fortnightly meeting of the Off-Duty Bridge Club Thursday night.

Covers were laid when guests arrived and a delightful dessert course was served. Pink roses centered the two tables.

During the bridge game, cheese biscuits, pickles, nuts and Oakes refreshed the players.

Mrs. Anderson Hostess To Thursday Book Club

The Thursday Afternoon Book Club held the final meeting of the current year on Thursday, May 20th, with Mrs. Victor Anderson as hostess.

The attractiveness of the Anderson home was enhanced with colonial arrangements of mixed summer flowers.

The refreshment table was beautifully appointed. Flowers in shades of pink, consisting of peonies, pompons and corn flowers, interspersed with fern, formed the centerpiece, and was complemented with burning tapers in silver holders tied with tiny pink nosegays.

Upon arrival, guests were invited into the dining room where, from opposite ends of the table, Mrs. Fred McKay and Mrs. J. A. McLeod served chocolate cake and lime ice with salted nuts. Later coffee demi-tasse was served in the living room.

Mrs. C. D. Bain was in charge of the program and in a most interesting manner discussed Lies Brody's new book, "Gone with the Windsors." She began with "A King's Story" which the Duke of Windsor wrote for Life magazine some years ago, and then lets Brody, in his inimitable way, take over and proceed to debunk what the former king had written.

It is a story full of human interest; at times tragic; at times unbelievably sordid. According to the author, it is a book that had to be written because of the inadequacy of the Duke's story.

At the time of the abdication, the throne of England was almost gone with the Windsors, with tragic results to the whole world. But the ship of state seems to have righted itself with capable, dedicated, beloved Elizabeth II at the helm. The old era has passed; a new era has dawned.

Club members present were, Mrs. Howard Godwin, Mrs. Fred McKay, Mrs. Russell Bassford, Mrs. H. O. Mattox, Mrs. J. W. Whitehead, Mrs. Charles Highsmith, Mrs. L. A. Tart, Mrs. C. D. Bain, Mrs. J. A. McLeod and one invited guest, Mrs. R. S. Creswell.
