Then I thought of razor blades." Kerns said Mrs. Williams told the officers "it was slow work with the razor blades." She said she finally managed to cut both bodies up in small pieces, wrap them in plastic and then put them in the refrigerator.

Deputy Sheriff Curt Moncaux said the boys' skulls were fractured, their jaws broken, and teeth bashed in with a blunt instrument.

HUSBAND IN JAIL
County pathologist F. D. Schofield said the dissecting job was "one of the neatest I've seen." He said the boys were dead more than 36 hours when found.

Mrs. Williams' husband, Hoyt J. Williams, was reported serving time in a Georgia prison for automobile theft.

Johnson, who had done previous repair jobs for Mrs. Williams and knew her well, told this story: "The woman came to Johnson's home yesterday and asked if she could bury some spoiled venison behind his garage. She said the meat was in a freezer that broke and the venison was bad.

Johnson said he helped Mrs. Williams carry four bundles from her car and dug a shallow hole for them. He said he did not think anything about it until he read in an afternoon newspaper that the mother and boys were missing.

BODIES WRAPPED
Moncaux said the boys' killer tried to cut off the younger one's head, but failed. However, the legs were removed from the torso, and the lower legs cut at the knees. The torsos were wrapped separately in pillow cases, lined with lime. Then they were wrapped in paper and finally in cellophane bags "like those found around frozen chickens" in a grocery store, Moncaux said.

Mrs. Marie Grimes of Pasadena, a clerk in the store where Mrs. Williams worked, said the hunted woman gave her a letter five days ago and asked her not to open it. It told of a dream Mrs. Williams had. She said she dreamed she was hit by a car and there was no one to care for her sons.

Machine Wins Mayor's Race In Chicago

CHICAGO (P) — Chicago's rarely-defeated Democrat-Republican organization showed its might today with a crushing victory over a two-term mayor who refused to be "dumped," Martin H. Kennelly.

Richard J. Daley, a veteran politician who heads the party's Cook County machinery, polled more than 100,000 votes than the businessman mayor, final unofficial returns from yesterday's bitterly-fought primary election showed today.

The returns gave Daley 364,839 votes to Kennelly's 264,775. Two other Democratic independents, Benjamin Adamowski and Clarence Bialek, got 112,072 and 4,329 votes, respectively.

Daley and his well-oiled organization will face a fiery young ex-Democrat, Robert E. Merriam, in the April 5 showdown battle for the mayor's chair of the nation's second largest city. Merriam, a 36-year-old alderman who bolted the Democratic Party, won the Republican nomination in a breeze against token opposition from two candidates. He took 106,626 votes out of 132,473 GOP ballots, one of the lowest Republican turnouts in years.

Kennelly had hoped for a turnout of more than a million Democrats to give the party's organization its third defeat in a mayoral battle in 47 years. Instead, only about 746,000 Democrats went to the polls.

had conviction that money could buy them anything or anybody and as a consequence neither had any true friends. They couldn't give friendship and so couldn't win it. They were sharp guys with a buck and one was about as ruthless as the other in setting out to make a fortune. Serge, of course, had the advantage of an education and so went much further than Mickey. But I couldn't help thinking as I had seen them around the Sunset Strip night spots that their paths had led to a violent end, and paths had to lead ultimately to a violent end. You can step on just so many people in this world and then somebody gets mad enough to strike back.

JOHN TAUGHT SERGE THE ROPES

That seems to be what happened to Serge and it almost happened to Mickey on more than one occasion. Mickey was lucky enough to make the jail house on his income tax case before his enemies got within accurate firing range. Serge wasn't so lucky. He might not have met death so soon if he had been lucky enough to be deported when he first came out of stir.

One of the strange dinner guests that first night I went to Rubinstein's home was a fellow from Texas I only knew as John. I never did learn his last name. However, Serge told me he had been in Lewisburg prison with him and that John had helped make prison life much easier for him.

"You know how it is in there," Serge explained. "If you're in for the first time you don't know the ropes and it pays to get next to somebody who does. John was a great help to me in getting adjusted. I didn't know where to spread my money so that it would do me the most good and John helped me out."

John was living for a while at Serge's house. He had just got sprung and landed in Los Angeles without money or prospects. He called on Serge who put him up, gave him walking around money and clothes. However, a year or so later when I asked Serge what happened to John he told me he had to "discard him."

"I found I couldn't do anything for him," he said. I asked him what he meant by that and he said: "John really belongs in prison. He couldn't cope with the outside world."

That was the only time I could get Serge to talk to me about his life behind bars. He said he didn't want to talk about it because the whole experience was so humiliating and he just wanted to forget it. He told me that he taught economics to the boys and tried to get them to understand the science of money. That must have been a riot, Serge telling bank robbers and such how to acquire a fast buck.

He wanted to excel as a tennis player and hired Big Bill Tilden to coach him. He put in long hours on the court but once when he heard some whispering about his friendship with Toldeo he quickly let the famous player go.

"I cannot afford the reputation of being offbeat," he told me. "I thought I detected Tilden being a bit too friendly with some young boys who come here to play and I couldn't afford a scandal here. It would hurt my mother."

And James Sures, manager of Gardner's Dairy, is getting a fine new movie camera... He won the camera for his outstanding record in a sales contest... A large number of Dunn citizens still haven't bought their 1955 city license tax... The only place where the flag was flown yesterday in observance of George Washington's birthday was at the city hall... Citizen Manager A. B. Uzzle didn't forget... The road show version of Guys and Dolls, which opened last night in Raleigh's Memorial Auditorium, is excellent, just about as good, in some respects, perhaps better, than the New York production... but the auditorium was only about half filled... The entire federal government spent only $3,577,000,000. The commission recommended a program that, it said, would save an estimated 250 million dollars a year, even at the very outset. It said the General Services Administration should try to simplify and improve the quality of government paperwork, reduce the volume, eliminate non-essential copies and standardize procedures and practices.

It also recommended that Congress authorize changes in income tax and social security information which now require from employers about 180 million lines of information each year, much of which duplicates other data.

relate the early life of the club and will recall the citizens of Dunn who in 1924 were instrumental in bringing Rotary to Dunn. The history will further relate the problems confronting the club in its first years of life and will pay tribute to the leaders in the Rotary movement in Dunn to the significant place in community leadership which it now enjoys. The Rotary movement is the oldest civic club movement in the world, and the strongest, and most influential.

The history to be read is full of names and local incidents which would be interesting to any group of Dunn citizens. The history is in fact a part of the history of the life and growth of the Town of Dunn. The history embraces thirty-one years of club life. Many of the members of the Dunn Rotary Club were not born when the Rotary club was organized in Dunn. All citizens of Dunn are beneficiaries of the organizers and leaders of the Dunn Rotary movement; and all have a stake in the continuing life and growth of the club.

Hubby Still Loves Slayer

ATLANTA (UP)—Federal prisoner Hoyt J. Williams, whose wife is held in Texas for the murder of their two children, said today he is convinced "if she did anything wrong, she was not responsible."

Williams, serving a term for transportation of a stolen car across state lines, accepted the news of the family tragedy calmly but was shocked and grieved, Warden William H. Hardwick said. The warden relayed United Press news dispatches to the prisoner. He said Williams authorized him to make public this statement: "I have always loved my wife and children and I still love my wife. I understand she has made a statement but if she did anything wrong, she was not responsible."

The warden said Williams told him that his family life had been congenial and that there was an atmosphere of love between him, his wife and children before he went to prison. He said that was the first time in ten years the family had been separated.

But he said that any tax reduction next year should be arrived at only after careful, analytic planning.
