I live with my children and they're good to me," she continued, "but this is the first time in more than 10 years that I've been invited out socially and it's so wonderful I just can't help crying." . . . The kind-hearted judge said he felt almost like crying with her. "In other words" he explained, "she has everything in the world except association with other people and that's what she craves most." The Wilsons said they all had a wonderful time that night and it's a safe bet he won't ever lose a vote in that whole crowd. We're passing his story along merely because you may know some older person like that old lady who needs something more than the material necessities of life . . . Hoover Completes Honorable Service

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Herbert Hoover today closed out another career — government reorganizer — and stood ready, at 80, for new calls to duty from his country.

Evelyn, who ordinarily is a very sweet and courteous girl, took one glance at the front page of The Daily Record last night and literally grabbed it out of our hands and started staring at it . . . As she stared, she broke into a big smile and then just beamed all over . . . "Will you please tell me what you've found in the paper that's of such great interest?" we asked the young lady . . . "Oh," she replied, coming back down to earth again, "I was just admiring that picture of those good-looking men who work at Star Furniture Company." . . . And she had that gleam in her eyes, too . . . "Which one of them?" we asked curiously . . . "Oh," she replied again that's her favorite expression, "I think they're all just as cute as they can be." . . . "Even with those beards and wearing those Davy Crockett outfits?" we asked . . . "Ye-ye-yes," she finally got it out, still in a daze . . . "I just think they're darling, don't you?" . . . We told her we thought we needed another cup of coffee and she finally glided off into the kitchen . . . If those fellows don't sell that little woman some furniture, they're not on the ball . . . The fact that school is out doesn't seem to bother Principal A. B. Johnson . . . He's such a hard-working fellow that he put in about as many hours now as he did during the school term . . . "This job is about like preaching," he explained, "a lot of people have the idea a preacher only works while he's behind the pulpit preaching those two hours on Sundays." . . . The elder statesman stepped down from his post as chairman of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, generally known as "The Hoover Commission."

But Mr. Hoover had no intention of counting himself out for further service to the government.

"I can't retire," he told a farewell news conference Thursday.

"Any man who is physically able has no right to refuse service to his government in times of crisis as this country is now in."

Mr. Hoover pronounced the words solemnly. In the course of four decades, he had been called to serve many times. He never refused.

In 1914, he was chairman of the American Relief Committee—which helped Americans stranded in war-torn Europe get home. In 1915, he took over the Belgian relief program and fed that starving people. In 1917, he became U. S. food administrator.

CALLED BACK BY HST
Four years later, he was made secretary of commerce and served under Presidents Harding and Coolidge, quitting in 1929 to become president himself. In 1946, President Truman called him back to service—as coordinator of the European food program—and again in 1947 to feed Allied-occupied Germany.

In 1948, again at President Truman's call, Mr. Hoover undertook the mammoth task of overhauling the executive branch of the government. The recommendations of the first Hoover commission on reorganization were estimated to save 4 billion dollars a year.

In 1953, another reorganization commission was created and President Eisenhower called on Mr. Hoover to head it.

At his news conference, Mr. Hoover said the recommendations of the second commission—if carried out—would wipe out this year's $3,500,000,000 deficit and save enough to allow perhaps a 2 billion dollar cut in taxes.

World AA Group Holds Convention

ST. LOUIS (AP) — More than 5,000 members of Alcoholics Anonymous, dedicated to staying sober and helping others get that way, today began the A. A.'s first international convention in five years.

The three-day meeting commemorates the 20th anniversary of the organization which tries to put alcoholics on the water wagon by bringing them together with others who have already licked the bottle.

The thousand of one-time alcoholics planned to have a good time during the three-day convention. They'll get together, talk, and have fun.

But, as one conventioner put it, "there'll be one thing about this convention that will be different from a lot of others we used to attend during our drinking days.

"When we get home, we'll be able to remember who said what where, and when."

The convention business sessions will be devoted to workshop sessions and to reviewing the growth of the fellowship from two members in 1935 to more than 150,000 recovered alcoholics today.

The climax will come at the final meeting Sunday, when Bill W., the A. A.'s surviving co-founder, will ask permission to step down from leadership.

Bill W., whose full name is marked in keeping with A. A.'s traditions of anonymity, was to urge endorsement of a plan relieving him and other "elder statesmen" of their responsibilities.

He wants these duties to go to a representative body known as the General Services Conference of A. A., which has been functioning under a temporary charter for the past five years. It is composed of 76 delegates from A. A. areas in the United States and Canada.

The A. A. came into being after Bill W., a New York broker, had "miraculously achieved sobriety" on his own.

Bill W. discovered that his yen for heavy drinking vanished when he worked with other problem drinkers.
