Tart

The argument out of which the fight arose, Goodman said stemmed from an argument he had early in the day with Mrs. Pauline Tart, wife of Thomas Tart. Goodman said he went to Mrs. Tart, well-known South Erwin business woman, to demand payment of the 15-year old daughter who had worked for Mrs. Tart in the tobacco harvest. He quoted her as calling him a liar and he retaliated by striking her with his fist.

MRS. TART TESTIFIES

Mrs. Tart, who also took the stand, told about the same argument. She contended that the Goodman girl has asked her to withhold the wages and not to pay anyone because she wanted to save her money for school clothes. She said Goodman struck her with his fist, and that later in the day when her husband returned he was informed of the encounter.

Tart said as a result of what he learned he crossed the street to the service station, the Tart store, opposite where Goodman was waiting on a bench. There both defendants agreed on one thing, "We went together." But there were different versions as to who struck first. At one time Goodman said he was knocked into the grease pit by Tart even after Tart's neck had been cut and blood was flowing freely before the fight was stopped.

Following the evidence pleas were entered by both men as guilty to engaging in an affray in which a deadly weapon was used. Judge M. O. Lee sentenced Goodman to six months on the roads, for the affray charge, and six more for assault on Mrs. Tart, on the affray charge, the road term was suspended five years on condition Goodman stay off the premises of Pauline and Thomas Tart, remain of good behavior and pay the court costs. The assault charge was suspended for two years on good behavior.

Judgment against Tart was continued for five years on condition he not harm or molest Goodman, remain of good behavior and pay the court costs.

Quinton Dilliams, 36 year old Erwin father on Thursday in Harnett Recorder's Court entered a plea of whipping his nine year old son in cruel and unreasonable manner. Williams told the court he was drinking at the time.

Before the case was heard the tearful mother, who at one point appeared ready to faint, and the child conferred with Judge Lee in the judge's chambers. The judge summoned the defendant to view the extent of the child's injuries which the boy said were administered with a belt. A physician's report, read to the court, reported multiple bruises on the left arm of the head, left shoulder and back, and across the back to the waist.

Judge Lee sentenced the father to 90 days in jail suspended on condition he not drink, not molest any member of his family. The costs were ordered remitted after the court was informed the father worked for small wages and had the reputation of being a kind father except when intoxicated.

In other cases Thurman Dorman was found guilty of public drunkenness and an earlier suspended sentence for assault on a female was ordered placed in effect.
