The Depression Has Set In

The WORRY CLINIC

By Dr. George W. Crane

Fred Croninger is a great teacher. But all good teachers have a sincere interest in youth. That explains why they donate their time on Sundays to handle Sunday school classes. Note my personal indebtedness to Professor Croninger.

Case 0-396: Fred H. Croninger, aged about 69, was principal of Central High School at Ft. Wayne, Indiana, where I spent four years.

When I was a mathematics professor here I was in school, and I took several courses from him.

After my graduation, he was promoted to head of the school, and made an outstanding record. But when it came time for retirement, he didn't want to twiddle his thumbs in idleness, so he shifted over to the Ft. Wayne Technical College, where he has been teaching mathematics ever since.

Incidentally several of our leading professors from Northwestern University after the school has arbitrarily retired them, have been grabbed by De Paul University and other Colleges in Chicago.

For this idea that a man is senile and useless at 65, is a political doctrine, not a scientific concept.

Professor Croninger recently sent me a letter with some questionnaires which he had been mailing to retired teachers in Indiana.

He asked them what they were doing. Were they working anywhere for pay? And how about their hobbies?

A large number of them reported that they were teaching Sunday school and doing church work as their main hobbies.

GOOD TEACHERS
Good teachers are usually so interested in the welfare of youth that they teach Sunday school classes or work in Scouting and Camp Fire Girls organizations, YMCA or CYO, even while they are still actively employed in the public school system.

So after they retire, it is only natural that they continue in educational work associated with churches.

Since Professor Croninger doesn't know I am discussing him in this column today, it will be a distinct surprise when he reads this in the Ft. Wayne JOURNAL GAZETTE.

But I am only one of thousands of his former students who are happy to laud him both as a great teacher, school administrator and Christian gentleman.

He was president of the Epworth League, a Young People's Society in the Wayne Street Church at Ft. Wayne, when I was 16 years old.

He invited me to attend one Sunday night. After three consecutive Sundays, I had brought out 15 other fellows, and as it was time for the annual election of officers, they nominated me for job.

That was doubly fortunate for me, because they elected four vice presidents. And just before the balloting, they asked every nominee to stand and take a bow, so the members could see whom they wanted to elect.

Well the fourth vice-president was a charming brunette. I had never seen her before. But when she stood up and flashed her charming smile at the crowd, I felt my heart do a complete flip-flop, and it has never righted itself since.

That girl later became my wife, so I am indirectly indebted to Prof. Croninger not only for two years of valuable experience as head of a church Young People's Society, where I learned more about public speaking than in two years at college.

But I also owe him thanks for indirectly serving as the means by which I met my future wife.

Professor Croninger has worked steadily in the church all his life. When I visit Ft. Wayne, I still see him in his accustomed pew at Wayne Street Church.

And I, too, have taught Sunday school for over 39 years, having started at the age of 15 in that same Wayne Street Church with a class of 10-year-old boys.

★ EDSON IN WASHINGTON ★ Japanese Mission Missed (Out on Its Urgent 'Wants')

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—In spite of all the polite expressions of good will on both sides, the talks between U.S. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles and Japanese Foreign Minister Mamoru Shigemitsu didn't solve every outstanding problem.

The conference was held without too much American confidence that the present Japanese government is very stable. Any long-range assurances on future Japanese policy or actions are therefore not very binding.

It was significant that one member of the Shigemitsu mission was Nobusuke Kishi. Now Secretary General of the Democratic party, he is a leader in the movement to unite with the Liberals. A strong Conservative coalition of this kind would have a clear majority in Japan's 467-member House of Representatives and 250-member House of Councillors.

KISHI HIMSELF is considered a likely future Foreign Minister or even Prime Minister.

The announced agreement for future consideration of progressive withdrawals of American forces from Japan will sound good to the Japanese people. But it doesn't tell the whole story.

Secretary General Kishi is known to believe that while Japan can build up her army over the next six years or so, the United States should continue to furnish the air and naval defense of Japan.

In spite of this, the Shigemitsu mission made its pitch that the United States should turn over to Japan all civil government control of Okinawa. They got no encouragement on this, for the simple reason that this island bastion between Formosa and Japan is the center of U.S. Air Defense of the Far East.

JAPAN'S BUDGET this year is around 100 billion yen, or 28 billion dollars. Of this less than four billion goes for defense. The Japanese say they can't spend more for defense till they get back more of their old foreign trade.

Members of the Japanese delegation let it be known in Washington that they wish to resume trade with China. The reason given is that there is now much smuggling between the two countries. The Japanese wish to substitute a legitimized trade, particularly in the import of raw materials like coal and iron.

The Japanese said they would not export strategic materials and they had no desire to build up this trade to prewar levels, when China was Japan's best customer. In spite of these assurances, they got no indication that such a development would be approved.

CONSIDERABLE CLANDESTINE negotiating between Tokyo and Peking governments has been going on for some time.

An indication of how far the Japanese want to go in the Far East was given informally in respect to the Korea question.

The Japanese were all in favor of reunifying Korea. But in the interest of restoring peace and stability in this area, one of the mission members had the temerity to suggest that the United States should back someone else than Syngman Rhee as President of Korea—because he was so anti-Japanese!

This is taken as typical of the whole approach of the Japanese mission. They want a lot more than they got out of the Washington talks with Dulles. These are things not even mentioned in the official conference communiqué.

It is believed that the Japanese will be back again, asking for more of what they didn't get, until they have complete independence and a free hand to do as they please in Asia once more.

Peron's Politics

Interpreting Argentine politics would seem to be no job for a novice. But President Juan Peron's latest moves have put the burden upon us once more.

After the revolt of this June 16, the experts said Peron probably was weakened for the long pull, but would be stronger in the immediate future. It hadn't worked out quite that way.

In the intervening weeks, his power relative to that of the army leaders who pulled his chestnuts out of the fire has appeared insufficient. The Catholics, against whom he was beginning to move forcefully at the time of the revolt, have steadily harassed him with hostile demonstrations.

Now, however, he has been emboldened to try to fasten again a tight grip on his country. His performance was staged with the customary Peron flair for the dramatic.

He announced his willingness to resign his office, in the manner of the humble public servant who does not wish to stay if he is not wanted. But the offer was a complete phony.

It was the signal for his favorite skills, the workers of the Peronist General Confederation of Labor, to assemble in a cheering mass beneath his Casa Rosada window in Buenos Aires and reject the offer. Having thus heard the call to duty from the "shirtless ones," why, of course, Peron could not possibly yield his office.

The outpouring of the Peron workers had a broader meaning. They are the symbol and a good share of the substance of his power. They are usually available for duty as a cheering section, a marauding mob, or a comfortable block of votes.

In the days since June 16, they have been lying low, suggesting that Peron dared not inflame army leaders by employing them. Their reappearance indicates fresh confidence on Peron's part.

Let me mention that Jayne was married in high school, had a baby daughter, took the baby to chemistry class while she cut up frogs, also took the baby to class while she modeled nude for an art class in college.

Jayne loves mice, and hamsters, and once put two hamsters in a housemother's bed in Los Angeles, which caused the housemother to develop a distaste for her.

Only 22 now, Jayne has a pink Jaguar, a divorce, a home in Beverly Hills, a size-38 bust, a Marilyn Monroe wiggle and a new towel she'll wear while taking a massage in the new Broadway show "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?"

"Aren't you doing a kind of Marilyn Monroe part?" I asked Jayne at lunch the other day.

"Uh... no," Jayne said. "It's a composite of all the glamour girls. What makes her tick, who makes her tick, and when..."

"Excitedly, she told her own story... born in Bryn Mawr, Pa., picked up and left two weeks later... Philadelphia, N. J., till she was 6... then Dallas.

"There was a very big deal in Highland Park School when I was 16," she spoke on.

Jayne (Palmer was her real name) married another high school student, Paul Mansfield. At 17, she was a mother.

"We took Jayne Marie to class with us. We had a baby carriage with built-in everything. We stuck a bottle in her mouth and every so often I'd have to change her diaper.

"I think we were the only couple in high school doing that."

Her husband went into the Army and Jayne went to Southern Methodist.

"When I got stuck without a baby-sitter, I took my baby to chemistry class.

"I used to think this is terrible. Here I am, a married woman, with a baby and a husband in Korea, trying to study drama -- and I'm cutting up frogs! My baby would sing right out in class. I would hand her candy under the table while we were cutting up frogs.

"We weren't living very high on the hog and I was trying to make extra pennies; so once or twice I modeled nude, but mostly in a leotard with nothing under at so they could the body structure."

Deciding to try Hollywood, she entered U. C. L. A.

"That summer I got two hamsters. I had them in my room. No pets were allowed. I put them in the housemother's bed. She was about 85 and they scared her. You know, after that, I couldn't go out of the campus.

"When I left, the students gave me a gift -- two more hamsters"

WILSON EARL ON BROADWAY

NEW YORK — I bring you Jayne Mansfield the country's newest -- and prettiest -- character... who of course, is from Texas.

BULLETINS

COMMERCE, Texas — Two persons were killed and 12 injured two miles west of Commerce last night when a Continental Trailways bus carrying 41 passengers collided with a pickup truck in which three persons were riding.

PNOM PEHN, Cambodia — The anti-Communist party of former King Norodom Sihanouk swept every seat today in the first Indochina election since the end of the Indochina war.

DENVER — President Eisenhower, thoroughly impressed by his first tour of the Air Force Academy, wondered today if the cadets had enough time to learn all they needed to know.

WASHINGTON — Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss) charged today that the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., was "launched by the Communist Party for its own ends."

SAN FRANCISCO — Firefighters fought a nip-and-tuck battle today against four fiercely raging fires blazing out of control in the Klamath and Sequoia national forests.

MANILA, P. I. — Military and civilian representatives of the eight SEATO nations met in two separate conferences today to draft plans for combatting Communist subversion and infiltration in their treaty areas.

EARLY WINNERS—Among the winners of the early phases of the Miss America contest at Atlantic City were these four beauties. From left they are: Barbara Vieira of Hawaii, first day swimsuit winner; Patricia Huddleston of Alabama, first day's talent winner; Sandra Wirth of Florida, who won second day's talent test by twirling lighted batons, and Ann Campbell of Oklahoma, winner of second day's swimsuit contest.
