commemorating the 250th anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin followed a stinging attack on the administration's defense policies by former Army Chief of Staff Matthew B. Ridgway.

Ridgway, writing for the Saturday Evening Posts charged that during his two years as chief of staff he was forced to adhere to ring the past ten years than any the "politico-military party line" of the Eisenhower "businessmen's administration."

Ridge said the administration s "measuring our country's security in terms of dollars, instead of the men and guns needed to carry out the solemn pledges we have made to our ailies around the world."

Ridgway attacked the defense policy of curtailing ground forces and relying mainly on atomic airpower. He said he had never been so shocked, even in combat experience, as when the President told Congress that his defense program (Bill) Thompson and A. B. Smith, for 1955 had been "unanimously recommended' by the Joint Chiefs

Property owners are opposing it on grounds that their property interests and the beauty of the street would be damaged, and that the rerouting of 301 will take care of any traffic problem that exists. City Manager Uzzle said curbs would be moved back to allow the widening of the street, but sidewalks would stay where they are now. There would be no cost to property owners along Ellis, he said, and only minor cost to the city, as the State Highway Departnent will bear the cost of paving.
