Adlai, Estes Face First Test Today

MANCHESTER, N. H. (AP) — Voters, some of them tramping to polling places on snowshoes over white-blanketed mountain trails, cast their ballots today in the nation's first presidential primary.

The rest of the nation waited mainly for the outcome of the battle between two Democratic presidential aspirants, Sen. Estes Kefauver and Adlai Stevenson.

A clue to the political hopes of Vice President Richard M. Nixon also was looked for.

Voters turned out in the tiny logging town of Millsfields early to cast their ballots by oil lamps. The town divided its four votes between President Eisenhower and Stevenson.

At Ellsworth, six voters user the original pine desks of a 100-year-old converted school house to give five votes to the President and one write-in vote each for Nixon and Sen. Styles Bridges (R-NH). The road leading to the small mountain-side community was ploughed especially for the election.

SHOOTS AT JUDGE
BAY CITY, Mich. (AP) — A recently discharged mental patient tried to assassinate Federal Judge Frank Picard with a shotgun blast today while Picard was hearing a case here.

The shotgun blast fired through the door of Picard's courtroom, narrowly missed the judge. It left an 18-inch pattern of damage on the stone wall directly behind the judge's head.
