Old Negro Dead Three Days When They Find Him

An old colored man, Haywood Morgan, who lived alone in the western part of the county apparently died three days before some curious neighbors found him.

Coroner R. L. Pate, Sr., said that the body was discovered on Wednesday evening after neighbors went to investigate. No-one had seen him since early in the weekend.

His door was locked, but they saw his body lying on the floor. Coroner Pate and Deputy Lee Upchurch went to the scene. The coroner said the cause of death was probably a heart attack.

Several different kinds of whiskey bottles were on the floor of his shack. Seventy-two years old, Morgan was receiving old age assistance and an unopened check was in his possession at the time of his death.

He is survived by a brother, John. His wife died many years ago.

Prosperous Farmer Arrested

Still Found Under Pack-House

Linwood Black, described by rural police as a prosperous farmer and "big wheel" in Anderson Creek township, has been arrested for violating the liquor laws.

Uncovering a still under a pack-house on Black's property, the rural officers found and destroyed an enormous quantity of white lightning - 148 and a half gallons. They also found and destroyed 800 gallons of beer.

Black, said a rural policeman, was "very cooperative." He lent them his truck so they could haul the liquor off and get rid of it.

Returning the compliment, policemen cited him to court but bond was not required. "He has a lot of property out there," one said. "He isn't going anywhere."

About fifty years old, Black has never been arrested before. Officers went to his home yesterday with a search warrant after receiving information that a liquor still was concealed on the premises.

Twenty-five steps from his house was a pack house with an "ordering pit" for tobacco. Under this building, fairly roomy quarters enclosed a well-arranged set-up for the manufacture of illegal whisky, officers claimed.

The vat-type still and its equipment is being held as evidence. Capacity is 400 gallons. Down the hill at a spring an electric pump had been installed for providing water. A ditch had been created from about 46 yards out, to provide

Union To Approach Federal Bureau

Gathering Facts On Erwin Housing

A Washington representative of the Textile Workers of America is flying down to Raleigh this evening. Tomorrow he will meet with the union local at Erwin to discuss possibilities of achieving a large housing project in the area.

The visitor, scheduled to arrive at Raleigh-Durham airport tonight at 5:36 p.m., is John Edelman. He will make a fact-gathering tour of the Erwin area and, on returning to Washington, will confer with officials of the Federal Housing Administration.

Sam Miriello, manager of the local at Erwin, said he previously talked with Edelman in Washington, D. C., and that it seemed very likely the FHA could be induced to take an interest in housing for the Erwin area. Since returning from the capital, Miriello has taken up the plans with his union and local businessmen and states there is enthusiasm from all sides. Rents have climbed in and move to Erwin if appropriate and a large-scale project there, he thinks, might help to combat this as well as provide needed living (Continued On Page Two) his car in his garage. The trio beat Orr, who was returning home from work on the afternoon shift at a Chrysler plant, and forced him to let them into his house.

They awakened Orr's wife, Gazella, 40; his daughter, Shirley, 11, and a roofer, Mrs. Eva Eden, 65, and led them to a library on the first floor where all were bound.

Orr said one of the men raped his wife and another threatened to rape his daughter unless he opened a safe which contained the receipts from a candy store which the family operates.

He said his daughter was taken to the basement where she was beaten and molested. She was then brought back to the library and bound again.
