Empty Mail Bags Found On Secluded Farm

LONDON (UPI) — Police found the hideout of the mail train robbery gang today about 72 hours after the bandits had fled with the loot of more than $7 million from history's biggest holdup. Scotland Yard disclosed the hideout was discovered about 11 a.m. on a secluded farm 42 miles northwest of London. "Empty mail bags" were found said Commander George Hatherill, deputy commander of Scotland Yard. The hideout was a brick house called Leatherslade farm, about 2 1/2 miles from the scene of last Thursday's robbery at Cheddington. Hatherill said the house looked as though the gang had left "in a hurry." "There were a lorry truck and two Landrovers (Jeep-like vehicles outside). A pit had been dug. It looked as though they intended to bury the stuff," the commander said. Hatherill said no money was found at the hideout, but that some mailbags had been located. He said the hideout "resembled an empty cottage." He said it was located some distance from main roads and warned that police would keep the area sealed off for two or three days while investigations were carried out. Hatherill said he already had ordered a team of finger-print experts to the house. He said he believed the gang had left the house about three days ago and that they might have been scared away by press publicity.

What They Think

TODAY'S QUESTION

Two of the big news stories in recent weeks were of Christine Keeler, the girl who rocked a government and negotiations for a nuclear test ban. Which held the most interest for you and why?

Miss Pamela Hawley Student, King's Business College "You'll have to admit that any girl who can rock an empire commands a lot of interest."

Charles Whittenton Desota - Plymouth dealer "I was more interested in the test ban because it was a step toward peace."

Mayor George Franklin Bialock "I'm more interested in anything that may keep peace but I have no confidence in any agreement, oral or written, with a Communist. On the other hand, the Keeler affair was interesting, too, because it is further proof that no matter how high an office a man (Profumo) may hold, he is still human and his appetite and passions are the same as yours and mine."

gram for more than 90 Scout packs, troops and posts with a total membership of about 1600 boys in Harnett. The average number of units served, nationwide, is only 35. Growth of Scouting in Harnett is a tribute to Walters' high type of hard-working leadership and to the hundreds of adult leaders who assist him in the program. As an indication of the progress made by the Boy Scout movement in Harnett, ten years ago, there were only 616 boys in 32 units in Harnett; five years ago, there were 947 boys in 50 units and (Continued on Page Six)

Joint City - State - Federal Project Business Study Slated Here

Dunn's city council has approved plans for a Central Business Study to be conducted by representatives of the State Department of Conservation and Development and financed jointly by the Federal government, the Town of Dunn and business firms of the community. City Manager Archie Uzzle said the study would be of untold value to the town and to every business firm in the town, as well as to individual citizens who will all benefit indirectly. The study will include a survey and recommendations for improvement of traffic flow, service circulation, pedestrian patterns, location of off - street parking; special land use characteristics; site design and landscaping. Participation Vital Total cost of the all - inclusive study project will be $4,400. Of this, the Federal government will pay $2,666.67, the Town of Dunn will pay $866.67 and the remaining $866.67 will be paid for by the individual business firms, pooling their contributions. John Donnelly of the Community Planning Division of the State Department of Conservation and Development told the city council it was preferable, in fact, extremely important, that business firms be allowed to share the cost. "The reasoning behind this is that other surveys and studies have shown that when the business man has a personal investment in the project, he takes a much greater and keener interest in it, and thus it proves far more successful." Chairman Billy Pope of the Dunn Retail Merchants Association told town officials he feels confident that local business men will support the project wholeheartedly and enthusiastically. It was approved by Chairman Myres Tighman and other members of the Dunn Planning Board before being presented to the city council. With both boards, approval was unanimous.

For Conferences With City Officials

State NAACP Chief Here

last week that nothing could be accomplished here as long as the Rev. B. B. Feider, local NAACP chief, handles negotiations. He said the minister had lost respect of both white and Negro citizens, neither of whom condone his handling of affairs.
