

Surviving Dionnes Recall

Childhood Unhappy

NEW YORK (UPI) — The four surviving Dionne quintuplets disclosed today that their childhood was painfully unhappy and blamed their parents for failing to treat the mas separate identities and expose them to ordinary experiences.

In a bitter autobiography appearing in the current issue of McCall's magazine less than a week after the birth of the Fischer quintuplets in South Dakota—the Dionnes said their childhood was ridden with a sense of guilt inflicted by their parents. They said their parental home in Corbett, Ont., was "the saddest home we ever knew."

Annette, Marie, and Cecile are now married and have a total of nine children, and Yvonne is a nun. They are 29.

The famous sisters, who entitled their biography "We Grew Up In Trouble", said their mother was convinced she had been singled out by God for a "miracle" but feared the world would think of her and her husband as animals because of the multiple birth. Mrs. Dionne told them the first thing she said to her husband after their birth was, "They will say we are pigs."

The sisters said their parents "behaved toward each other as though they had been partners in some unspoken crime by bringing us into the world" and "drummed into us that the discord in which the family lived much of the time was our doing."

"Dad" and "Mom" Dionne treated their older children as one family, the quintas as a separate category.

"We were treated as five who really amounted to one, five of a kind so close and alike that we could not possibly have separate identities or desires," they wrote.

"We were drenched with a sense of having sinned from the hour of our birth... we did not know any boys to be friends with... we had no training whatever for any kind of career."
