If you lived in Chicago . . . your electricity would cost more

In Chicago and most other places across the country CP&L residential customers would pay more for their electricity. On the average, our customers use a little more than 500 kilowatt-hours per month.

The typical monthly bill for 500 kilowatt-hours of electricity in Chicago is $10.09. It is only $9.00 for CP&L customers. In fact, the average price per kilowatt-hour that our residential customers pay is 22 per cent below the national average.

How has CP&L been able to make electricity such a bargain for you? We've installed larger, more efficient generating units. We've improved our methods for generating and transmitting electricity. We have worked hard to introduce every reasonable economy.

While there are a few places where your electric bill would be a little less, CP&L is proud to supply dependable electric service at prices so much lower than most people pay.
