TV CHATTER

to hate when he played villainous moppet roles for Metro, just signed up for something on the lovable side in a segment of MANY HAPPY RETURNS.

Dianne Lennon will rejoin her sisters Peggy, Kathy and Janet on Saturday Dec. 12 as a regular member of the Lennon Sisters. Three years ago Dianne retired from her regular singing role in favor of marriage. It was nine years ago this Christmas that the four young Lennon girls made their first appearance on TV with maestro Welk.

Arthur Treacher came out of 30 years of retirement, automatically speaking, for his special guest star role on BEVERLY HILLBILLIES. As a terribly proper English butler, he was called upon first to drive a small sports car and then to take a turn at the wheel of the bed-ragged ancient automobile which is the hillbillies' family car. It was the first time Treacher had operated an automobile since he gave up driving 30 years ago.

Interview With "Broadside's" Naval Officer

Edward Andrews, the foppish, self-pampering naval commander in ABC-TV's "Broadside", joined the Army early in 1941, served in the artillery, fought in the Battle of the Bulge, and was honorably discharged with the rank of captain at the end of World War II.

"I was lucky," says Andrews. "While other actors were at home slaving away in military musicals, I was out there grumbling 'this is the army' with no small degree of authority. But I was where I felt I belonged, as were many other actors who joined before Pearl Harbor." Andrews, the son of an Episcopal minister, has talked with actors who performed in military shows during the war. Most of them, says Andrews, reached a point where they practically had to beg for combat duty.

"Those shows served a wonderful purpose and they were great morale boosters," says Andrews. "Actually, some of the fellows in them came out more exhausted and shaky than the G.I.'s. There are other kinds of battles, you know."

How does Andrews feel about playing a naval commander?
 "Just fine. But remember, I'm not really playing an American military officer. I'm playing a jerk.

"If I thought anyone took this character seriously, I think I'd join the Army again."

DRAMA OF YOUTH GANGS
 Youth gang activities on the streets of New York are revealed in "Memo from Purgatory" on "The Alfred Hitchcock Hour" Monday, Dec. 21. The story, an adaptation from the autobiographical work of Harlan Ellison, tells of a young writer who joins a gang to gather authentic material for a book.
