tion. If the courts get into such cases, Latham said, there would be overlapping of the functions of different branches of government.

The officers, who have been on leaves of absence with pay pending the outcome of their trials, were indicted after a long investigation of the police department by the State Bureau of Investigation. The probe was triggered after a service station operator accused the police of mistreating him while he helped them investigate the theft of some gasoline from his station.

Indicted in the case were Hord, Williams, Det. Capt. William McCall, Dets. Earl Fesperman, Jack Fesperman and Fred Hucks, Sgt. Fred Teeter and former Det. Bernie Stogner.

Hord had been charged in 16 counts with some of them accusing the police chief of permitting gamblers and three houses of prostitution to operate in the city. Hord said today's ruling made him "naturally very happy."

The Kuhlman case was involved in the investigation after the state charged the police had aided the woman and refused to prosecute her in the death of the infant.

Judge Robert Morgan charged the jury to decide two issues: Did a contract between the insured and the company exist at the time of death? If so, how much money should the plaintiff recover? He instructed the jury that if it ruled no contract existed, not to answer the second issue.

Jurors found that a contract did exist and that full double indemnity in the sum of $3,000 should be paid.

Attorneys J. Shepard Bryan and Robert C. Bryan of Dunn, representing the insurance company, indicated they would appeal the verdict.

INQUEST TOMORROW — Sam Cooke, a recording star, was shot and killed as a prowler at a Los Angeles motel. Elisa Boyer, right, said she had been forced to accompany Cooke to the motel, then had fled, and that the shooting occurred while he was trying to tin dher. An inquest will be held Wednesday. Inquest Is Slated In Singer's Death

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A coroner's inquest on the shooting death of popular recording star Sam Cooke, 32, will be held Wednesday.

Cooke, a minister's son whose 1957 record, "You Send Me," sold 25 million copies, was shot to death Friday morning by a woman motel manager, Mrs. Blanche Lee Franklin, 55.

Police reported Cooke, clad only in a sports jacket, knocked down the door of the manager's office about 2:30 a. m. in search of a female companion who had fled from his room.

ing the council awarded a 30-year franchise to Community Antenna Television of Dunn, a new corporation headed by Ellis Barbour, prominent local insurance man.

In many towns, the operators of cable antenna work out an agreement with telephone companies for use of its poles. This has been done in a number of Tar Heel towns.

Barbour's group reportedly had planned to negotiate with the phone company for use of its poles. Barbour could not be reached today for comment on the phone company's demand for a share of profits.

However, it was pointed out that power poles can be used just as easily and Carolina Power and Light Co. is reported agreeable to full cooperation in such projects.

In the Town of Dunn, the power company owns more poles than the telephone company.

City Manager Uzzle said today he had sent a copy of the phone company's communication to members of the city council.

Meanwhile, a group of local television dealers, headed by Dale and Raymond West of West Radio & TV, are planning to appear before the council Thursday night to warn of the objectionable features to cablevision.

"It's nothing in the world but pay television," said Mr. West today. "They claim it's a public service, but it's nothing but a money-making proposition for the operators."

Says Town Rental Low

He said it was unfortunate the city council hadn't investigated more thoroughly before awarding the franchise and added, "Even if it had decided to award a franchise, the $500-a-year rental is far too low." He said operators were paying as much as $500 a month in other towns the size of Dunn.

West pointed out that in some areas of the country what started out as cablevision ended up as pay television, forcing many local television stations off the air.

Since the town, the utilities commission or nobody else has any control over what they can do or how high they can raise the price for cablevision, contained West, the public won't know what to expect next.

He said the usual procedure after cablevision goes into operation is for its owners to start sending pay programs over unused channels to subscribers, creating a situation in which private tv stations cannot compete. "So they go out of business and then the public has to buy pay television or do without. They have no choice."

"We're not opposed to pay television as such," said Mr. West. "We just think the people ought to have a choice which cablevision does not give them."

He said it would eventually eliminate TV in rural areas because the local TV antennas would not extend into rural sections.

West said it was another encroachment on private enterprise. He predicted it would be just a matter of time before the local operators would sell out to some big, nationwide syndicate, adding, "This has been the practice practically everywhere else."

At the last meeting of the city council, Mr. Barbour emphasized that cablevision was not to be confused in any way with pay television, that there is no connection between the two.

"I wish the town board had investigated a little more thoroughly," said West, who made it clear that local TV dealers will present the other side of the story to the council Thursday night.

Angier School Discussion Set

A panel discussion on relationships between schools and parents is scheduled at 5:30 p. m. Thursday at North Harnett School, Rt. 2, Angier.

Charles D. Marsh, principal, will discuss "School Relationships." Other panelists and their topics include:

Mrs. Alice Solomon, guidance counselor at Washington Junior High School in Raleigh, "What the Parents Expect from Schools."

W. Freeman, guidance counselor at Wake County Schools, "What Schools Expect from Parents."

Mrs. Eura H. Jones, associate professor of education at Shaw University, is chairman of the panel.

Public Banned At Trial Of Accused Rapists

GREENSBORO (UPI) — The prosecution opens its case today against four Negroes who are charged with the rape last summer of a white woman with only court officials and newsmen permitted to hear testimony.

Judge Robert M. Gambill ruled Monday that spectators would be banned from Guilford County Superior Court when the rape victim took the stand to identify her alleged attackers. The ruling came at the conclusion of nine days of jury selection.

Two Negro men, nine white men and a white housewife will hear testimony in the case. Selection of a jury ended Monday when a white businessman was chosen as an alternate juror.

Prosecuting attorneys indicated earlier they would seek the death penalty for Leroy Davis, 22, of Coonra, Long Island, N. Y.; Willie Hale Jr., 22, High Point; Julian O'Neil Hairston, 18, Greensboro; and Charles Donald Yoes, 25, Jamestown.

Each of the four pleaded innocent to indictments accusing them of ambushing the woman and her male companion on a rural road last June 21, raping the woman and robbing the couple of about $12.

Angier Post Office To Be Dedicated

One of the added services of the Angier Post Office, which opened doors of a new building Thursday, is a motorist collection box for depositing mail from cars.

This is the first new post office building in Angier, and according to Postmaster Roy Williams Jr., the dedication will probably be held within the next 90 days.

The dedication ceremonies will include personages such as Representative David Henderson and an official from the United States Post Office Department representing the Postmaster General.
