

Jim Martin Disagrees With House

North Carolina's Ninth District Congressman, Jim Martin, expressed deep disappointment and disagreement over action taken by the House of Representatives to halt American bombing and air support in Cambodia.

Last night, in an abrupt turnabout, the House majority, on three separate amendments to a supplemental military appropriations bill, voted to deny the use of such funds for Cambodian air operations.

In opposing these votes, Congressman Martin noted that the "same House of Representatives which had stood firmly behind the President's efforts to negotiate a treaty and cease fire in Southeast Asia has now obstructed efforts to compel the North Vietnamese to abide by that treaty."

"It was clearly understood," Martin pointed out, "by the North Vietnamese at the Paris peace talks that if they violated the treaty by continuing hostile armed operations in Cambodia - which with some 30,000 troops they have done with impunity - we would renew bombing of their positions in Cambodia."

It is regrettable that the majority of the House has now declared in effect that there is really no necessity or expectation for them to honor their agreement."

"It is difficult to conceive that this will not be interpreted by the Communists as an open invitation for further violations all over Southeast Asia and elsewhere."
