

Morgan To Open Branch Offices

Senate candidate Robert Morgan has pledged to open branch offices in various areas of North Carolina after he is elected in order to bring the U.S. Senate office "closer to the people."

"I have a very deep feeling," Morgan said, "that the office I am seeking should be brought closer to the people, and I mean this literally."

"In order to accomplish this, I will, soon after I take office, establish branch offices in various parts of the state so that citizens who have problems or complaints or who want to communicate with their elected senator will be able to do so and do so personally."

Morgan, who won the Democratic primary with a majority vote over none other candidates, said he believes that the establishment of branch offices will "be productive and will enable me to represent North Carolina Better."

The former attorney general first revealed his plan to operate more than one North Carolina office in a speech to the North Carolina State Employees Association at that body's annual convention in Winston Salem.

He did not specify how many offices would be established or their locations.

Jim Martin
Seeks Re-Election

Martin Begins Campaign For Re-Election

Ninth District Congressman Jim Martin kicked off his campaign for re-election Thursday night, telling a crowd of supporters that he intends to continue pushing members of Congress to cut federal deficit spending. He said only by balancing the budget can Congress begin to bring inflation under control. Martin stressed that this is the most important goal facing the 93rd Congress in the time remaining before adjournment.

Speaking at Park Center in Charlotte, the first term Republican representative from Davidson said President Ford will soon present a plan to reduce excessive federal spending. Congressman Martin said those in Congress must be ready to support the President and make cuts in the budget across the board. He added that there are enough votes to sustain a veto, but added that a Presidential veto won't be needed "if the people elect those who will vote to restrain spending."

Congressman Martin said he does not expect to have much time to actively campaign between now and the November 5th election, since the press of Congressional business will keep him in Washington until mid October. He called on his supporters to be his spokesmen and advocates, spreading the word, door-to-door.

Eastern Cuts

Charters Fare

One Half

Effective January 5, 1975, Eastern Airlines will inaugurate a new charter service priced approximately one-third to one-half below day-coach fares.

Jeff Dishongh, Eastern's vice president-passenger sales, said the charters, to be operated with Boeing 727 Whisperjets, may originate in any U.S. city with an adequate airport, east of San Antonio, Omaha and Minneapolis. In addition, he said, they may originate in the Canadian cities of Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto and the Bahamian cities of Nassau and Freeport.

Called Starlight Service Charters, the new service will be available to affinity groups such as clubs and organizations other than those set up especially for travel. Single entity groups such as those formed by a corporation giving incentive trips to employees or free travel to customers as contest awards may also take advantage of the reduced fares.
