

Summer Health Program Set For Minority Students

The North Carolina Health Manpower Development Program (NCHMDP), an inter-institutional program of the state university system, operating under the aegis of UNC-Chapel Hill, has been awarded a $26,580 grant by the Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust of Winston-Salem. Executive director of the foundation, Robert G. Page, informed NCHMDP of the Award to help finance its 1975 Clinical Work-Study Summer Health Program. Additional funds to underwrite the cost of the program will be provided through the financial aid offices of the participating institutions: Elizabeth City State University, North Carolina Central University, Pembroke State University, and UNC-Chapel Hill.

The ten-week summer program, scheduled for June 2 through August 8, is designed to provide approximately 100 minority and disadvantaged students, who are enrolled in health or health-related curricula at the participating institutions, with realistic clinical work assignments in health care agencies. The program will also provide participants with selected academic enrichment experiences. Dr. E. Lavonia Allison, NCHMDP director, stated that the program "offers an excellent opportunity for selected students to have significant learning experiences during the summer months, while at the same time, earn money needed to continue their education." The health interns will earn a minimum of $80 per week; twenty percent of which will come from NCHMDP grant funds, and eighty percent from institutional work-study funds. In order to participate, students must be eligible for financial aid according to work-study guidelines at the institutions where they are enrolled.

The clinical experiences will provide students with intensive exposure to the atmosphere of health care agencies and personal contact with health professionals. "By working closely with health professionals in the execution of their daily responsibilities, students will not only become familiar with the many services and duties performed by various health personnel, but will also learn more about the many operations involved in the delivery of health care services." "These experiences will hopefully reinforce the student's commitment and motivation for a health career," Dr. Allison stated.

In addition to the clinical assignments, the students will be involved in selected learning experiences, including academic health sciences seminars conducted by local health professionals, field trips to health care facilities and professional schools, and programmed health sciences self-instructional materials. According to Dr. Allison, the self-instructional units, covering health sciences terminology, use of the health sciences library, and organization and expression for the health professional, will be a most important and meaningful aspect of the summer experience. "These units are designed to strengthen language, study, and communicative skills essential to professional training."

"We believe that the clinical involvements and the academic experiences will help the students become more aware of the many options available for a health career, and will also enhance their potential for realizing their health career goals. These experiences should also serve to broaden their awareness of the critical need for more minority health professionals," Dr. Allison said.

The NCHMDP's Health Careers Recruitment-Counseling Regional Center directors who will be responsible for implementing the summer program are: Walter Winborne, Elizabeth City State University; Mrs. Adele Butts, North Carolina Central University; and Dr. Todd, Pembroke State University. Since UNC-Chapel Hill does not have a regional center, UNC-CH students will participate in the program through the NCCU regional center. For more information concerning participation in the program, contact one of the regional center offices, or NCHMDP 966-2264-65.

Dr. Allison reports that since 1971, the summer program has enabled more than 200 students to progress through preprofessional and professional studies. "This program represents a very meaningful effort toward realizing selected NCHMDP long-range objectives to increase the number of minority and disadvantaged persons trained and employed in health careers, and to improve the delivery and quality of health care services for minority and disadvantaged communities."

In addition to the work-study summer program, NCHMDP, through its central office and its regional centers, provides general health careers information, information on available health training programs in North Carolina and elsewhere, and recruitment-admission services for minority or disadvantaged students interested in health training programs. It also identifies available financial aid resources, offers students counseling and enrichment experiences, and information on employment opportunities for minority health professionals. For more information on other program services, contact NCHMDP, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Chavis Followers Head For Washington Rally

Against Racist and Political Repression, of which the Rev. Chavis is a vice-chairperson, is organizing a mass mobilization in Washington, D. C. on May 31 to "save the Wilmington 10, Joann Little, the Charlotte 3 and all political prisoners in North Carolina," Alliance executive secretary Charlene Mitchell said. "Before this latest action by the N. C. Supreme Court, we were planning to go to Washington to show national concern for the victims of that state's so-called system of justice. Now the demonstration becomes all the more imperative.

It is crucial to create a climate of opinion in Washington, D. C. favorable to the Wilmington 10 as the U. S. Supreme Court.

"We cannot overemphasize the importance of saving Ben Chavis and his co-workers from prison," said Ms. Mitchell. "The whole country must begin to show that it understands that North Carolina leads the nation in repression, and that what happens to the Wilmington 10 will happen in every city and town in the United States unless we stop it there."
