To Star In

Bridge Too Far

"The Making of 'A Bridge Too Far,'" a special focusing on the recently released movie about a heroic but disastrous military operation against the Nazis in World War II, will be presented on Channel Nine Wednesday, August 31 at 10 p.m.

Featured in "The Making of 'A Bridge Too Far'" are interviews with some of the stars specially filmed for the telecast. On camera will be: Dirk Bogarde, Michael Caine, Sean Connery, Elliott Gould, Gene Hackman, Anthony Hopkins, Hardy Kruger, Laurence Olivier, Ryan O'Neal, Robert Redford, Maximilian Schell and Liv Ullman. Other headliners, who appear in the scenes from the film, include James Caan and Edward Fox.

During the program, Redford says that, in his opinion, wars are "inevitable"; Ullman proclaims herself as a pacifist; Caine (a British veteran) says he would burn his draft card if called again for military service; Hackman admits he "couldn't take the discipline" of military life.

The motion picture, based on the book by the late Cornelius Ryan, recounts the bloody 1944 attempt to establish an airborne bridgehead in Holland, with the focal point at the arched bridge at Arnhem, in an effort to shorten the war against the Nazis.

"People's Command Performance: 1977" implemented a new selection concept. Viewers were given the opportunity to select both the personalities and the material they would like to see on a television program. The results were obtained in a nationwide survey conducted by Chilton Research Service, an independent research firm.
