

Andrae Crouch And

His Disciples Will Perform Here

Andrae Crouch and the Disciples, who appear in concert at the Charlotte Coliseum, Independence Boulevard, on Saturday, November 12, beginning at 7:15 p.m., have crossed the river of stereotyped gospel music and have won acclaim from both soul gospel and hard rock buffs.

Andrae describes his contemporary gospel as a free art form which is not limited to the traditional religious music mold. The jazz, Latin rock and soul content add tremendous feeling and impact and have wider appeal; yet, the thread of gospel flavor remains more than discernible. Radical and/or different styles of music are necessary and effective in drawing the attention of today's audiences.

In the past, it has been too common to be able to place a performer's style into a narrow category. His show may have variety, but the style remains unchanged. With too many artists, "when you've heard one of his songs, you've heard them all."

Contemporary music, however, is breaking those boundaries, particularly in the soul gospel areas. An "Andrae Concert" will move from hymn-like ballads to rock revival peak which brings crowds to their feet. The style is so different throughout, you'd think there were several dif-

No two concerts are alike, since the audience response dictates the pattern of styles employed by Andrae. This flexible "bridge" has brought Andrae Crouch and the Disciples the success which won them a Grammy Award.

Tickets for the concert are priced at $4, $5, and $6 and are available at the Charlotte Coliseum and Living Word Bookstores in Charlotte.

Wall Street Week Examines Steel Industry

WALL STREET WEEK with Louis Rukeyser examines the troubled steel industry on PBS and Channel 42, Friday, November 11 at 8:30 p.m.

Peter F. Marus, first vice president and director, Mitchell, Hutchins, Inc., and one of WALL STREET's top steel experts, will be the guest. An international consultant to the steel and aluminum industries, Marcus suggests part of the current problems have developed from failure to employ a common language system and data base.

Panelists Frank Cappiello, Carter Randall, and Julia Walsh explore steel's dilemma and also examine current market conditions and answer viewer's questions.
