The highlight of Johnson C. Smith University's four-day homecoming activities was the dedication on Friday of the Inez Moore Parker Archives and Research Center.

Ms. Parker, who was chairperson of the University's English Department for 25 years, officially retired three years ago when she began to develop the center with the enthusiastic support of the 110-year institution's administration, alumni and friends.

A 25-year old white Dallas, N.C., policeman was harassed and forced to resign from his job for "race-tainted reasons, according to the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA).

LEAA, a federal agency that provides financial support for law enforcement, reportedly said the officer lost his job because he associated with blacks and in particular that he dated a black woman. LEAA has threatened to cut off its funding if the officer is not reinstated with back pay.

A federal judge has ruled that minority-hiring quotas approved by Congress for public works projects are unconstitutional. The ruling is designed to affect only projects approved after Oct. 31, 1977. However, most of the $4 billion that the judge's order is to affect has already been allocated, according to federal officials.
