DENTAL HINTS

New Dental Product

How does a new dental product get on the market, and how is it proved to be safe to sell to the public as an over-the-counter product? Progress toward the retail marketplace can take several routes and the following is one example.

Recently, Dr. Israel Kleinberg, head of the department of oral biology and pathology at State University College, Stony Brook, N.Y., discovered a peptide which has been named Sialin. In laboratory tests, Sialin (having already been successfully synthesized) has shown a potential for reducing tooth decay through its seeming ability to raise the pH level in the mouth to a point that makes the decay process unlikely. Since many popular foods and most candies cause an acid to form in the mouth, thus setting the stage for decay to begin, negating that acid should cut the decay-forming potential.

nued research and testing, plus a royalty payment arrangement for exclusive use of Sialin.

Now, with this funding, tests on animals can begin, and these will continue for about 1-2 years. If these are successful, Warner-Lambert will then have to obtain an investigational new drug (IND) permit from the FDA before clinical testing may begin. When this is granted, clinical testing of the product involved is required for a minimum of three years before it can be placed on the market. If all goes well, in 6-8 years there may be a new method of preventing tooth decay through a new product application. If it doesn't prove effective and safe...back to the drawing board!

No, it isn't time to quit brushing yet!
