

Leaders Of Tomorrow!

Army ROTC Scholarship Winners

Who are tomorrow's black leaders?

This question is heard more and more these days. Audrey Adams and Frederick Jones, III may answer the call for leadership, for they are receiving the skills needed to fulfill that role through Army ROTC.

Ms. Adams and Mr. Jones are 1980 winners of Army ROTC four-year scholarships. Now in their third year, they have discovered the rewards for the training, specifically the amount of skill they possess to handle situations calling for leadership and management techniques.

For Cadet Adams, a junior at Western Maryland College, Westminster, Maryland, Army ROTC has been a real challenge. "I've enjoyed ROTC. I've been able to do so many things that I never thought I'd be doing...such as making quick decisions in my role as a Cadet Battalion Sergeant Major." Ms. Adams plans to pursue a career in military intelligence, utilizing her language skills in Spanish and English, which are also her majors.

The Maryland-born cadet has received numerous academic and ROTC honors, including the Army Superior Cadet Award, The Reserve Officer's Association Ribbon and four Academic Achievement Wreaths. With a cumulative grade point average of 3.9, and a 4.0 average in military science, Adams has excelled in her studies at Western Maryland.

Commenting on her academic and military training progress Major Julius D. Duvall, Professor of Military Science, said, "Cadet Adams has achieved a remarkable succession of accomplishments thus far in her college career. This outstanding record of performance is due in great part to her attention to detail." Ms. Adams was recently accepted into the International Literary Honor Society and one day plans to take up writing as a second career goal.

Frederick Jones is looking forward to becoming a commissioned officer, but his eye is on a personal career goal as well—to join the Army Medical Corps. A biology major at Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, N.C., Fred applied for the ROTC scholarship to save money on his education and serve in the military.

Fred's leadership abilities, like Audrey's, have improved greatly as a result of the ROTC leadership course. "It opened my eyes to deficiencies I had in my leadership ability that I have since corrected." Cadet Jones' extra-curricular activities include being president of his chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, resident assistant of his dormitory, a member of the Catholic Student Association and a Big Brother in the Big Brother-Big Sister Program in Winston-Salem. Commenting on Cadet Jones' future as an officer, Major Robert A. Lewis, Assistant Professor of Military Science states, "I see him as an outstanding officer. He has a high regard for academic discipline and has adapted greatly to the challenges that Wake Forest offers."

Army ROTC scholarships are awarded solely on merit, not on household income. After completion of college, scholarship recipients are commissioned as second lieutenants and will spend four years on active duty and two in the Reserves, or eight years in the Reserves.

The scholarships are awarded on a two-, three- or four-year basis and pay for tuition, required educational fees and an amount for books, supplies and equipment. Plus, they provide a subsistence allowance of up to $1,000 each school year they are in effect.

Four-year scholarships are awarded on a competitive basis to students entering college as freshmen. Two- and three-year scholarships are awarded to students already enrolled in college. The application period for four-year scholarships will end November 15.
