

Mrs. Alexander's Excited At Prospects Of Winning

By Audrey C. Lodato
Post Staff Writer

First-time contestant Alberta W. Alexander is excited at the prospect of participating in The Post's Church Woman of the Year Contest. "I have taken The Post for years," she revealed, "and always share information in it with others." The enthusiastic contestant believes the yearly contest is a good idea to get others to subscribe to The Post and help the church at the same time. "It benefits the church, the community, and everybody," she noted.

Ms. Alexander has been a member of Mt. Olive Baptist Church in Huntersville all her life. Her parents and grandparents were also members of the century-old church. The delightful church woman is junior teacher of her Sunday School class, president of the Women's Club and Pastor's Aides Club No. 1, chairperson of the church dining room, youth department worker, and sings in the Senior Choir and Mt. Olive Gospel Chorus. In her words, "I try to help in whatever I can do." Her pastor of 25 years, the Rev. Max B.

McIlwain, "thinks the contest is great," according to Ms. Alexander, but they haven't had a chance yet to discuss the details. Ms. Alexander's altruistic attitude encompasses her participation in the Church Woman of the Year Contest. "I haven't even thought of winning," she said. "I just want to get in and do what I can for the church and the community. I'm not out to win for myself."

BOOSTING BLACK SCHOLARSHIPS -- Ben Wesley, center, area sales manager for the Adolph Coors Company, presents a $20,000 check to officials of the Ebonics Support Group at the University of Southern California for development of scholarships for blacks and other minority students. Accepting the contribution from left are Dr. Michael Jackson, Ebonics president, and Ebonics Founder Thomas Kilgore Jr. The Coors check was the first major donation received by Ebonics since the group recently embarked on a $1 million scholarship fundraising drive. The Coors-Ebonics grants will be used to help minority students in various fields finish their college education.
