Stroh's Basketball Challenge Will Feature NBA Basketball Players

The Stroh Brewery Company this week announced plans to once again sponsor the Stroh's Basketball Challenge, a ten-city American tour which will raise $100,000 for various local charities.

Featuring 30 of the world's best professional basketball players, Stroh's second annual national tour tips off September 4 at the State Fair Arena in Birmingham, and includes stops in Jacksonville, New Orleans, Jackson, Chattanooga, Little Rock, Raleigh, Charlotte, Louisville and Nashville. Stroh will donate $10,000 to charities in each of the cities.

Highlighting the games will be the professional debut of Olympian Michael Jordan, North Carolina's two-time College Player of the Year who recently co-captained the United States' gold-medal performance in Los Angeles. Defending scoring champion Adrian Dantley and fellow all-stars Kelly Tripucka, Alex English and Jeff Ruland head the list of standout veterans participating in the Stroh's Basketball Challenge, a joint venture with ProServ, the international sports marketing firm based in Washington, D.C.

"We're very excited about this year's tour," said Hayes Jones, Stroh National Manager Black Market Development. "The Stroh's Basketball Challenge will provide sports fans in these U.S. cities the opportunity to see the world's best basketball players and support local charities. "For the second consecutive year, we have succeeded in drawing pro basketball's best veterans as well as the year's most exciting rookie, last summer with Ralph Sampson and this year with Olympic standout Michael Jordan," added Jones. "The 1984 tour continues our commitment to athletics, particularly basketball, and we're pleased to be working on this once again with ProServ."

"The tour marks a collegiate homecoming for many of the athletes. Artis Gilmore returns to Jacksonville, where he displayed his basketball talents as a collegian, on September 5. Sidney Lowe, a member of N.C. State's 1983

National Championship team, returns to Raleigh on September 13, and will be joined there and in Charlotte by former Tarheel stars Jordan, James Worthy, Phil Ford, Al Wood and Dudley Bradley. Darrell Griffith and Jerry Eaves, teammates on Louisville's 1980 NCAA Championship squad, make a homecoming on September 15.

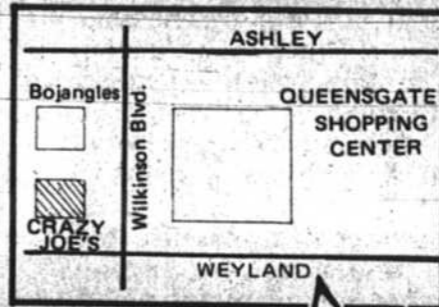

"The commitments of both the players and the Stroh Brewery Company have again ensured a first-class tour," said ProServ Senior Vice President Stephen Disson. "With established pro stars such as Adrian Dantley, Buck Williams and James Worthy playing alongside promising rookies like Michael Jordan and Melvin Turpin, the tour will be a real treat for basketball fans across the country." ProServ, with ten worldwide offices, represents leading professional athletes and media personalities while pursuing business and promotional opportunities for its clients. In addition, the firm provides marketing and sponsorship avenues to companies seeking identification in the professional sports field. The Stroh Brewery Company is the third largest brewer and the largest family owned and operated brewery in America.
