A college that prospered on peanuts can teach you a lot about survival.

If you're like most of us, what you see here is only a peanut. But to a certain Dr. Carver of Tuskegee University, the peanut was the key to hundreds of products, with the potential to keep Tuskegee—and the South—self-supporting.

Just as Carver unlocked the secrets of the peanut, Black colleges and universities are tapping the awesome potential of generations of young people. In this unique environment, students have the opportunity to play as large a role in campus life as their talents will allow. Class president. Homecoming queen. Captain of the debate team. Quarterback or Shakespearean actor. At Black colleges, every door is open; no dream is too ambitious. Is it any wonder that, though they enroll only 16% of Black college students, Black colleges produce 37% of all Black college graduates?

What's more, those graduates take with them the character and achievement that unlock the doors of the finest graduate schools, businesses and political offices. When you're considering colleges, shouldn't you consider the ones that gave us Martin Luther King Jr., Thurgood Marshall and Jesse Jackson? If you're out to make the most of what you have, no one can teach you more.
