

Domestic And Social Programs High On Clinton Moore's Agenda

By Audrey C. Lodato
Post Staff Writer

A resident of Newton, NC, Clinton Hyatt Moore is among the 10 Democratic candidates running in the May primary for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by incumbent John East, a Republican.

Moore, a supervisor in a textile mill that closed, says he understands the problems of North Carolina workers in what he calls "our basic industries." He states, "I am very tired of how the rich are trying to run the government through propaganda. I believe a senator should use his influence to bring the people of the country and the state together and certainly not try to divide them."

He cites domestic and social programs as the most pressing issues facing Congress through 1988. Here are his positions on a number of issues.

DEFICIT REDUCTION. Moore supports repeal of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit Reduction Act, saying, "I am against across-the-board budget cuts." He expresses concern about the effect on the elderly and needy.

TAXES. He says he supports the concept of federal tax reform, "in principle only." He thinks tax reform should be designed to increase revenues, rather than be "revenue neutral." Congress needs to raise revenue through a minimum corporate tax, a tax on imported oil, and a 38 percent tax for those in higher tax brackets, according to the candidate.

NATIONAL DEFENSE. Moore opposes both military and humanitarian aid to the contras in Nicaragua because "humanitarian aid usually ends up as military aid or in someone's pocket."

He is also against the Strategic Defense Initiatives, saying, "If we build one, they will build one, and the target of one system will be the other system. We have been trying to build an air defense system since World War II and we haven't accomplished that yet."

ERA AND AFFIRMATIVE ACTION. Moore supports the Equal Rights Amendment and stepped-up affirmative action programs on the federal level. He states, "I am disturbed at the way the administration seems to be trying to destroy all affirmative action."

SOCIAL SECURITY. The candidate is against cuts in Social Security and adds these comments on Medicare: "If rules are stiffened or payments lowered, supplementary insurance premiums will go so high many people will not be able to afford them. This extra cost will probably fall on some other level of government."

OTHER ISSUES. On apartheid in South Africa, Moore comments, "We should bring all moral and diplomatic pressure possible to end this terrible thing." On Superfund funding, he says, "I believe protecting our environment is one of the most important issues." He favors some measures of protectionism in trade, such as limiting imports to a percentage of the market.

The Young Adult and the Sanctuary choirs of Mt. Carmel Baptist Church presented an Easter Cantata, "No Greater Love," recently. The production was under the direction of Beverly Walker. Organist Sharon Johnson and pianist, Sylvester Davenport provided the music. The audience was treated to a moving interpretation of the last days of Jesus Christ, His crucifixion, and His resurrection. (Photo by Bernard Reeves)

At Southpark

Greg Patent To Participate In Opening Of Belk's Housewares

Greg Patent comes to Belk Southpark to participate in the opening of the Southpark Housewares Department. Mr. Patent will conduct Cuisinart Cooking Schools on Wednesday, April 23, from 8:30-9:30 and on Thursday, April 24, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Belk Southpark. Fee for the classes is $15 which includes the price of his exciting cookbook.

Greg Patent left his position as professor of zoology at the University of Montana in 1983 to devote full time to a career in food. In the few years since then, he has established himself as a popular, nationally known cooking instructor, a television personality and a food writer.

His new book, "Patently Easy Food Processor Recipes," has just been published by the Cuisinart Cooking Club. His new television series with the same name is currently aired in Western Montana with the hope that it will be shown nationally within a year.

Greg Patent is familiar with many cuisines, having been born in Hong Kong, raised in Shanghai and influenced by the Russian and Middle Eastern cooking of his two grandmothers. When he moved to San Francisco with his parents at age 11, he began cooking the meals for his working parents. His favorite after-school entertainment was a daily television cooking show. Fascinated, he was challenged to try the recipes and duplicate the results.

At age 18, he entered the 10th Pillsbury Bake-Off and won a $1,000 prize for his Apricot Dessert Bars.

He won prizes from other contests including the National Pineapple Cooking Classic and a Campbell Soup Company contest.

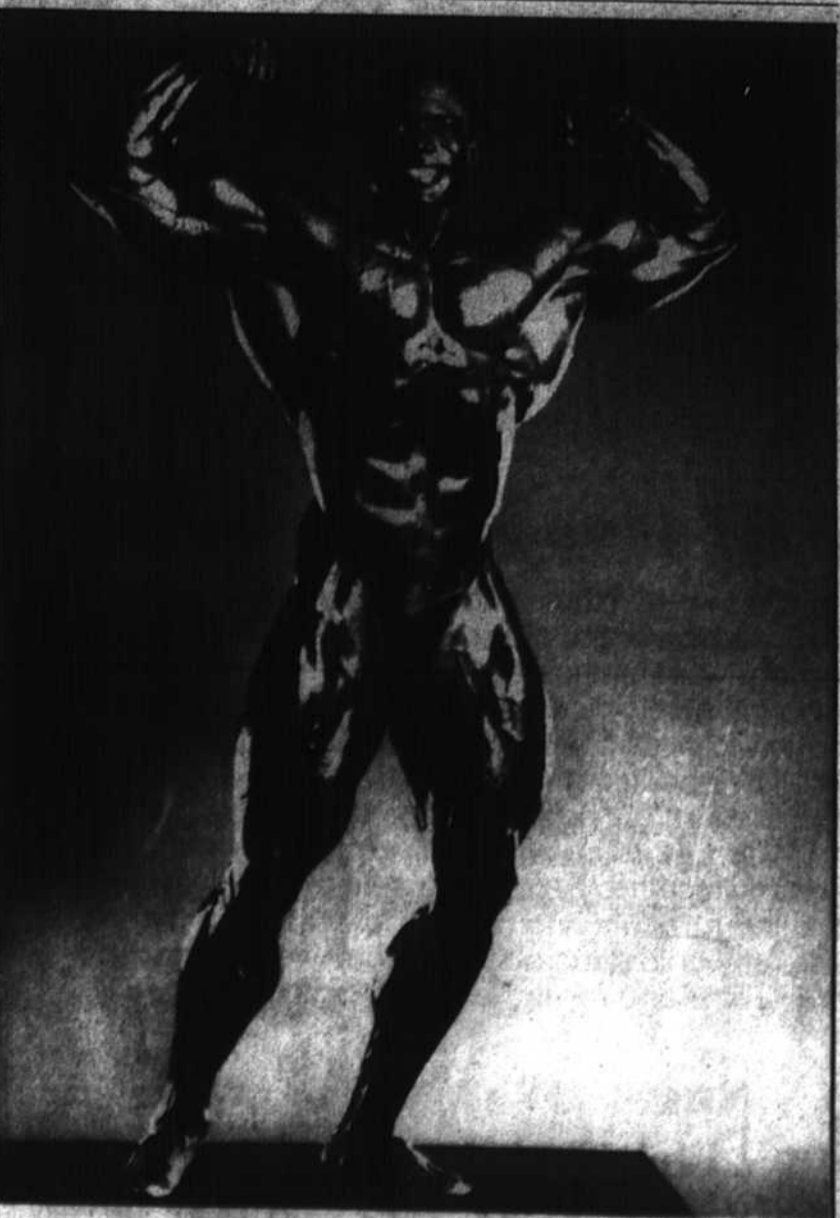

During his college years, science took precedence over cooking. After receiving a doctorate in zoology from the University of California at Berkeley and doing research at the University of Washington in Seattle, he accepted a position on the faculty of the University of Montana.

In 1979, while still a full-time professor, he began his first television series, "Big Sky Cooking," which aired for more than two years. That led to the publication of two cookbooks featuring recipes from the show and a weekly newspaper food column. It also brought him to the crossroads where he had to decide whether he wanted to be a full time professor or a cooking teacher.

During the television series, he became particularly adept at explaining and demonstrating the use of the food processor which is what led him to his present position with Cuisinart, Inc. He has taught food processor classes throughout the country and he frequently demonstrates his food processor expertise on television programs. His food articles appear regularly in Cuisinart Cooking Club publications, "The Pleasures of Cooking," and "Cuisinart Cook."
