SHOP FREEDOM DRIVE COMING BACK

John Minter
POST CORRESPONDENT

Folks counting Freedom Drive out as a viable commercial and residential area had better think again.

Sure several long time businesses have moved to other locations and the Sears Outlet bargain basement store in the Freedom Mall will depart soon.

But there's good news behind that cloud, starting with the enthusiasm of merchants and residents in the corridor through Charlotte's westside. Several hundred of them showed up for a recent meeting to discuss ways to improve Freedom Drive's image and bring more businesses to the area. And, a Winn-Dixie supermarket and CityView, a small shopping center, opened in the past year just off Freedom Drive on Allegheny Drive.

And a number of small businesses, including restaurants, thrift markets and an indoor flea market, have located in the area.

But the future lies in bringing jobs to the area, to provide a steadier stream of customers for area businesses. That could come soon as the developer of the CityView shopping center proceeds with plans for a business park on the 112-acre site.

For residents, community policing is helping with the crime problems many areas of the city are experiencing.

And, a new public library will open in CityView next month.

The biggest boon to the area may be the reconstruction of the Freedom Drive interchange with I-85 as part of the continued widening of the north-south interstate.

Plans are to relocate Tuck-
