a slouch at either. It's comfortable enough and the ride and handling are better than you might expect. As for its offroad capabilities, I'll take Toyota's word for it. I couldn't imagine scratching the loving paint job on my dark blue test vehicle. I probably could have gone anywhere. My vehicle was equipped with the optional locking front, center and rear differentials. That's not available on any other vehicle. It might not be necessary, but if you ever got stuck in real deep muck, you would be happy you selected that option.

There's not much else to be unhappy with about the Land Cruiser. The standard stuff is plentiful: power windows, door locks and mirrors; anti-lock brakes, air conditioning, auto-off headlights, front and rear headrests, separately controlled rear-seat heating system and cruise control.

There are eight options available, five of which were included on my test car:

leather, third seat package, locking differential and premium cassette, CD and radio.

As it sat, my test vehicle was $50,050. Did I say the Land Cruiser is an expensive of thing? It is indeed.

company officials may be trying to determine whether strong North American sales will last before committing to a major expansion.

"There is limited potential for future growth in the United States," he said. "They don't want to be caught in the reverse of the current situation, where they have excess capacity waiting for a market."

work ethic and the productivity of the Oklahoma City GM plant is certainly no surprise to me. I'm honored to have the privilege to assist in showcasing our plant and its employees to the rest of the country," Keating said.

As he spoke, workers from the United Auto Workers local 1999 unfurled a large sign that read "Right to Work is Wrong," a reference to Keating's long-standing call for a bill banning mandatory union membership, which the Republican claims would help attract new business.
