know how to write, read, or do math then they're not going to hire you. It's that simple. If you don't get an education, then you will most likely end up in a menial job in society."

"The second thing you need to know," he urged, "is that you've got to help other people. Somebody, whether you'd like to admit it or not, helped you."

Kyisha Lingo, chief coordinator of the youth corps, said Williams'

"Finally, people are starting to become interested in our children," she said. "It was such a good feeling to have someone give them important advice."

"I learned a lot from his talk," said 15-year-old James

Rand.

Youth Corps counselor Walter Swann echoed Rand's sentiment. "I agree with Mr. Williams and his work within the school system. He believes in setting higher standards so that the children can aim higher."

ulty, and as such, I am not going to ask of them, what I cannot do," he said.

Reactions to Foster's appointment was positive. H.K. Gaster, assistant principal for instruction and curriculum at North Rowan High, said, "I am pleased to see him in a principalship. During the years that I worked with him, Dr. Foster was energetic and very student-centered. He is a friend and colleague, and I will miss our relationship."

Heggins, whom Foster replaced, offered praise as well. Heggins told the Salisbury Post that Foster should "go in and do the best job he can."

Marines probe racist acts at camp

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. - Marine Corps officials are investigating alleged racial discrimination and racial slurs reported in December by inmates at the Camp Lejeune Regional Correctional Facility.

Lt. Col. Steve L. Little, a spokesman for the base, would not comment specifically on allegations made in 1996, but did confirm that some similar allegations were confirmed in a 1995 investigation.

"The base immediately and thoroughly investigated all of the allegations of maltreatment of prisoners at the brig," Little said of the 1995 case.

He said it revealed inappropriate comments were made to prisoners, brig personnel failed to prevent racial slurs in a timely manner and brig guards violated tobacco-use regulations. As a result of the 1995 case, Little said the corporal who made the comments was counseled and reassigned and additional telephones are being installed for prisoner use.

The commanding officer of the brig has ensured strict compliance with brig procedures and operations and that training is conducted regarding the treatment of detainees and prisoners, he said.
