New Jersey artist Jim Gary admires a dinosaur skeleton he built from automobile parts at Lowe's Motor Speedway Tuesday. His exhibit, "Dinosaurs of the 20th Century" will be on display at the Food Lion Auto Fair through Sunday at the Speedway. Admission is $10 for the car show and auction.

Prisoners released

released, would be sent to separate camps where they would receive special programs.

In early March, the government announced that it would free the common law criminals and that at least half of the country's prisoners had confessed to their role in the genocide. The government also extended by one year a 45 March deadline for detainees to confess their role in the genocide, thereby enabling more of them to be granted clemency.

In February 2003, close to 25,000 prisoners who had pleaded guilty to participating in the genocide were provisionally released from detention centers. The release plan comes as Rwanda prepares to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the genocide in April.

In Kenya last December, President Mwai Kibaki ordered the release of over 11,546 prisoners in order to decongest his country's overcrowded prisons.
