Florida Lady Was in a Miserable Condition, But She Found Cardui Helpful, and Got Well.

Altha, Fla.—In explaining how she found Cardui so helpful during change of life, Mrs. Ella M. Bailey, R. F. D. 2, this place, said: "I became so weakened it was an effort for me to get around. I knew what was the matter, but I felt I couldn't give up. I just dragged, and I certainly was nervous. I was so restless I could not sit down long—yet so weak I couldn't get about. It is a most miserable and such a helpless feeling."

"I wouldn't get depressed and out of heart. I began to feel, after awhile there was no use to try to get well. This is all wrong, for it makes a person worse."

"I had heard of Cardui, and thought it might strengthen me. A neighbor had used it with good results."

"I took one bottle (of Cardui), then I saw I wasn't so nervous, so kept it up."

"Gradually the nervousness left me. I began to eat and sleep better. Was soon well, and all right."

"Cardui did wonders for me, and I certainly do recommend it."

"Thousands of other women have written, to tell of the beneficial results obtained by taking Cardui, and to recommend it to others."

"Cardui has stood the test of extensive use, for more than forty years, in the treatment of troubles common to women."

Good druggists, every where, sell Cardui, the woman's tonic. Try it.

wilderness ringed in by hostile men, and obliged to rely for aid on a handful of the most desperate criminals in Europe.

Another matter worried Jose Quintana: he was not only short on provisions, but what remained was cached in Drowned Valley; and Mike Clinch and his men were guarding every outlet to that sinister region, excepting only the rocky and submerged trail by which he had made his exit.

Now how to keep his loot; how to get back to Europe with it, was the problem that confronted Quintana after robbing Darragh. And he determined to settle part of that question at once.

About five miles from Harrod Place, within a hundred rods of which he had held up Hal Smith, Quintana halted, sented himself on a rotting log, and waited until his men came up and gathered around him.

For a little while, in utter silence, his keen eyes traveled from one visage to the next, from Henri Piquet to Victor Georgiades, to Sanchez, to Sard. His intent scrutiny focused on Sard; lingered.

If there were anybody he might trust, a little way, it would be Sard.

Then a polite, untroubled smile smoothed the pale, dark features of Jose Quintana:

"Bien, messieurs, the coup has been success. Yes? Ver' well; in turn, then, in accord with our custom, I shall dispose myself to listen to your good advice."

He looked at Henri Piquet, smiled and nodded invitation to speak.

Piquet shrugged: "For me, mon capitaine, eet ves ver' simple. We are five. Therefore, divide into five ze gems. After zat, each one for himself to make his way out—"

"Nick Salzar and Henry Beck are in the Drowned Valley," interrupted Quintana.

Piquet shrugged again; Sanchez laughed, saying: "If they are there it is their misfortune. Also, we others are in a hurry."

Piquet added: "Also five shares are sufficient division."

"It is propose, then, that we abandon our comrades Beck and Salzar to the rifle of Mike Clinch?"

"Why not?" demanded Georgiades sullenly—"we shall be worse to face before we see the Place de l'Opera."

"There remains, also, Eddie Abrams," remarked Quintana.

Crooks never betray their attorney. Everybody expressed a willingness to have the five shares of plunder properly assessed to satisfy the fee due to Mr. Abrams.

"Ver' well," nodded Quintana, "are you satisfy, messieurs, to divide an' disperse?"

Sard said, heavily, that they ought to stick together until they arrived in New York.

Sanchez sneered, accusing Sard of wanting a bodyguard to escort him to his own home. "In this accursed forest," he insisted, "five of us would attract attention where one alone, with sufficient stealth, can slip through into the open country."

"Two by two is better," said Piquet. "You, Sanchez, shall travel alone if you desire—"

"Divide the gems first," growled Georgiades, "and then let each do what pleases him."

"That," nodded Quintana, "is also my opinion. It is so settle. Attention!" Two pistols were in his hands as by magic. With a slight smile he laid them on the moss beside him.

He then spread a large white handkerchief on the ground; and from his pockets, he poured out the glittering cascade. Yet, like a feeding panther, every sense remained alert to the slightest sound or movement elsewhere; and when Georgiades grunted from excess emotion, Quintana's right hand held a pistol before the grunt had ceased.

Sard's trained eyes appraised every allotment. Without weighing, and, lacking time and paraphernalia for expert examination, he was inclined to think the division fair enough.

Quintana got to his feet lithely. "For me," he said, "it is finish. With my friend Sard I shall now depart. Messieurs, I embrace and salute you. A biento in Paris—if it be God's will! Donc—au revoir, les amis, et a la bonheur! Adions! Each for himself and gar' aux fies!"

Sard, seized with a sort of still terror, regarded Quintana with enormous eyes. Torn between dismay of being left alone in the wilderness, and a very natural fear of any single companion, he did not know what to say or do.

En masse, the gang were too distrustful of one another to unite on robbing any individual. But any individual might easily rob a companion when alone with him.

"Why—why can't we all go together," he stammered. "It is safer, surer—"

"I go with Quintana and you," interrupted Georgiades, smilingly; his mind on the diamond in the muzzle of Quintana's pistol.

"I do not invite you," said Quintana. "But come if it pleases you."

"I also prefer to come with you others," growled Sanchez. "To roam alone in this filthy forest does not suit me."

Piquet shrugged his shoulders, turned on his heel in silence. They watched him moving away all alone, eastward. When he had disappeared among the trees, Quintana looked inquiringly at the others.

"Eh, bien, non alors!" snarled Georgiades suddenly. "There are too many in your troupeau, mon capitaine. Bonne chance!"

He turned and started noisily in the direction taken by Piquet.

They watched him out of sight; listened to his careless trample after he was lost to view. When at length the last distant sound of his retreat had died away in the stillness, Quintana touched Sard with the point of his pistol.

"Go first," he said suavely. "For God's sake, be a little careful of your gun—"

"I am, my dear friend! It is of you I may become careless. You will mos' kin'ly see south, and you will be kin' sufficient to start immediate. Tha's what I mean."

"I thank you. . . . Now, my friend Sanchez! Tha's correct! You shall follow my friend Sard ver' close. Me, I march in the rear. So we shall pass to the east of thees Star Pon, then between the cross-road an' Ghos' Lake; an' then we shall repose; an' one of us, en vidette, shall discover if the Constabulary have patrol beyon' Allons! March!"

PLAN TO CLASSIFY EX-SERVICE MEN BY THEIR OCCUPATIONS

Washington, Oct. 30.—Examination by army officers of notes taken during the recent conferences here with a selected group of civilians as to principles which should govern any future military draft regulations has brought out several distinct features which the conferees were agreed should apply to the classification of enlisted personnel.

For one thing it was the judgment of the civilian conferees, all of whom had war-time draft experience, that work necessary in the army should be classified by occupations in order that the classification of men called to the colors could be expedited and their assignments be based on the similarity of their civil training and military work they were best fitted to perform. It was also believed that the classification of men should begin when they were called by local draft boards and not await their arrival at mobilization centers.

Another point brought out was the difficulty of dealing in the army with men of low mental caliber. A suggestion was made the regulations should prevent such men from being called for active military service.

The conferees were in harmony also as the desirability of using men available only for limited military service from the beginning of the operation of the draft law and not deferring such cases for later treatment.

To meet the problem of dealing with limited service men and occupational specialists the suggestion was made that clearing pool centers for each of these groups might be established and the excess from the various local boards could be turned over to these pools for further assignment. The plan would work especially well in distribution of specially qualified occupational specialist, it was held.

MUTT AND EFF

When Mut and Jeff are next seen in this city, which will be at the Strand theatre tomorrow night, they will appear in one of the best musical comedies that it has been our good fortune to chronicle for some time. The title of the new piece is "Mutt and Jeff's Honey-moon." It is in two acts and six scenes and tells the story and plight of two husbands who endeavor to even scores with their wives who insist upon the old and pernicious system of constant hen-pecking. In this instance Mutt is the chief victim. He seeks his pal and co-conspirator, Jeff, for counsel. As night be imagined, Jeff steers his friend in the wrong course with laughable and sidesplitting results. Special musical numbers; a bevy of exceptionally pretty young women; a large and competent cast; any amount of innovation and novelties, surprises and features ultimately and conspicuously figure in the triumph. The new scream will hold forth commencing with the customary matinee.

DR. SMITH SPEAKS

Noted Mission Executive Speaks of Trip to Africa.

Rev. Dr. Egbert W. Smith, the head of the Foreign missionary work in the Southern Presbyterian church, spent yesterday in the city. In the morning he delivered an address at the First Presbyterian church on Africa. Dr. Smith has recently returned from a nine months trip to Africa, having spent something like six months in the mission fields of Africa with the Southern church's representatives. His address yesterday morning was in the nature of a report of this wonderful interesting and helpful trip. Dr. Smith gave glowing description of the trip, the country and the progress being made by the American missionaries. He closed with an appeal for aid in keeping up this work and for the enlargement of it through this wide territory which the Southern church has accepted as its special responsibility.

Dr. Arthur Newton Thompson and Mrs. Thompson, of Northfield, Mass., are spending a few days in Salisbury en route to Florida for the winter. Dr. Thompson preached at the First Presbyterian church yesterday morning. While in Salisbury they are stopping with Mrs. Thompson's son, Mr. Parks of the Normal school.

"SCOTTY" RETURNS TO HIS DEATH VALLEY; BRINGS MULES ALSO

Death Valley, Cal., Oct. 30.—"Death Valley Scotty," that most spectacular and picturesque of prospectors for gold, has once more become a mystery man.

He has reappeared near the scene of his famed gold strike of some 20 years ago, which started his career for reckless spending of money.

His movements are again surrounded with secrecy. From time to time he takes a four-mule team and disappears into the hills, returning with nuggets and specimens of high grade ore.

Is Scotty on the trail of a new bonanza? Is he back at his much discussed and almost mythical "mine"? Is he soon to come zipping in from the desert with gold lined pockets? A dozen questions are raised.

Ostensibly Scotty is running a ranch and appearing as a movie actor. Some weeks ago Scotty appeared at the Grapevine ranch, which, it was announced, he would run for a Chicago capitalist. Then a movie camera appeared and posed in Death Valley scenes. With Scotty went Sam, his "Blackman Friday," and with whom he has been closely associated on all his excursions, enterprises and adventures.

In between ranching and posing he trekked into the hills with pack mule. Efforts have been made to track him, but never have succeeded in locating his cache, while Scotty has never revealed the location of his mysterious mine—or whatever it is. Indians of Death Valley fear to trail him, it is said. As for "Death Valley Scotty" he just "reckons he's working a little," sleeps out of doors on a blanket each night, does his cooking in a tent and acts mysteriously.
