Keep A-Goin'!

If you strike a thorn or rose,
Keep a-goin'!
If it hails, or if it snows,
Keep a-goin'!
'Tain't no use to sit an' whine
When the fish ain't off your line;
Bait your hook an' keep on tryin'!
Keep a-goin'!
When the weather kills your crop,
Keep a-goin'!
When you tumble from the top,
Keep a-goin'!
S'pose you're out o' every dime;
Gittin' broke ain't any crime,
Tell the world you're feelin' prime!
Keep a-goin'!
When it looks like all is up,
Keep a-goin'!
Drain the sweetness from the cup,
Keep a-goin'!
See the wild birds on the wing;
Hear the bells that sweetly ring,
When you feel like sighin'—sing!
Keep a-goin'!

DISCOMFITURE OF A LADY.

ATTACKED BY A BARREL OF CIDER WHILE PRICING KINDLING WOOD.

Lewis Matthewson, a young farmer of Chestnut Hill, drove down to this city last week with a load of kindling wood to sell. Before starting out he went down cellar and tested a full barrel of cider. Finding it had a good head on, Lewis loaded it on the back end of the wagon, with the idea that it also could be sold in the city.

It was a long way to town, the day was warm, and the sun beat down on the load with considerable strength. Farmer Matthewson had entered the city and was driving along the street, looking out for kindling wood customers, when a handsomely dressed woman approached the curb to ask him the price of the load.

The farmer turned his horse up to the walk and had just laid down the reins when an explosion occurred. The bung of the cider barrel flew out with great force and, as luck would have it, landed fairly in the face of the prospective customer. A stream of cider followed closely in the wake of the bung. Both struck her in the mouth, and there was a panic. The blow, of course, startled the woman, and as she opened her mouth to scream the cider filled it so quickly as to force the scream back. It choked the woman so that she nearly strangled.

The noise of the explosion, the hiss of the escaping cider and the convulsive gurgle of the woman combined to frighten Farmer Matthewson's horse, and before the young man knew what had happened the animal had started to run. Matthewson was thrown to the ground, the wheels ran over him, and the horse kept on. Before he stopped the kindling wood was scattered over two wards, the wagon was wrecked, and the ambulance was on the way to take the young farmer to the hospital. Fortunately he was not much injured, except in feelings, and even these were nothing compared to the state of mind of the woman.—Ansonia (Conn.) Letter.

Knew Where to Go.

"Can you match this piece of calico?" said Farmer Oldtime as he entered Cobwebb's dry goods store.

"Guess so," replied Cobwebb, as he reached for a roll of dust covered goods on his shelf.

"G' me a quarter of a yard. Mandy wants to make over a dress she bought nine years ago, and a clerk at Wholesale's told me I could find it here because you never advertised any."

Manners for Boys.

Poor fellows! How they get hectorated and scolded and snubbed, and how continual is the rubbing and polishing and drilling which every member of the family feels at liberty to administer.

No wonder their opposition is aroused and they begin to feel that every man's hand is against them, when after all if they were only, in a quiet way, informed of what was expected of them, and their manliness appealed to, they would readily enough fall in line.

So thought "Auntie M.," as she pointed out the following rules for a twelve year old nephew, who was the "light of her eyes," if not always the joy of her heart, for though a good-natured, amiable boy in the main, he would offend against the "proprieties" frequently.

First come manners for the street: Hat lifted in saying "good-bye" or "How do you do?"

Hat lifted when offering a seat in a car or in acknowledging a favor.

Keep step with any one you walk with.

Always precede a lady up stairs and ask her if you may precede her in passing through a crowd or public place.

Hat off the moment you enter a street-car door and when you step into a private hall or office.

Let a lady pass first always, unless she asks you to precede her.

In the parlor, stand till every lady in the room is seated, also older people.

Rise if a lady comes in after you are seated, and stand till she takes a seat.

Look people straight in the face when speaking or being spoken to.

Let ladies pass through a door first, standing aside for them.

In the dining room take your seat after ladies and elders.

Never play with knife, fork or spoon.

Do not take your napkin in a bunch in your hand.

Eat as fast or as slow as the others, and finish the course when they do.

Rise when ladies leave the room, and stand till they are out.

If all go out together, gentlemen stand by the door till ladies pass.

Special rules for the mouth are that all noise in eating and smacking the lips should be avoided.

Cover the mouth with hand or napkin when obliged to remove anything from it.

Use your handkerchief unobtrusively always.

Do not look toward a bedroom door when passing. Always knock at any private room door.

"Did you make up all these rules, auntie?" said Roy, as a copy, neatly printed by a typewriter, was placed in his hands.

"Make them up! No. These are just the common rules of society that every gentleman observes. You will not find your father failing in one of them."

"Well, but he is a man!" said Roy, depreciatingly.

"And do you not wish to be a manly boy?"

Roy said nothing, but it was noticed that the rules were placed very carefully in his drawers.

Some months have since passed, and auntie has had the pleasure of hearing repeatedly the remark, "What a manly, thoughtful little nephew you have," as one and another observed his polite and careful attention to others.

Perhaps there are some other boys who will like to cut out these rules and read them over now and then, keeping or getting some good friend to keep a record of their success or shortcomings in the observance, always remembering that the mothers, sisters and aunts are the "ladies" to whom these attentions should be shown, and not merely the guests and strangers.

SCHOOL-ROOM DECORATION.

WHAT CAN BE DONE BY THE PUPILS IN THE SCHOOL.

There is possibly no feature more important in school life than the school room decoration. It is a keynote to the visitor of the atmosphere of the class. It is the background in our memories of that most distinct of pictures—our class room. I think first and foremost comes the recollection of the clock, its size and shape, and the very echo of its ticking. The rest will vary in position of importance according to individual impressions. But I think it fair to say that any object we ourselves donated, be it trivial as it may, claims its place among these pictures.

Since, then, children's minds are deeply impressed by these early surroundings and especially interested in their own efforts would it not be an advisable plan to have the children themselves decorate the room, guided, of course, by the good taste of the teacher.

The scheme of beginning the new term with bare walls and decorating them as the term advances is, I think, a very good one. That everything in the room should bear an intimate connection with the child's development cannot be made too much of. Those in authority are too apt to look upon decorations as a luxury. They are as important as the three R's.

Teachers say, "We know all this." Then why don't you show it in your class rooms? Tear down those ghastly advertisements with red ladies and chromatic flowers that blossom nowhere but in the inventive brain of an advertiser for some life insurance company. (A picture of a good sized green hen has been seen on a class-room wall.) Remove to the store-room the gilt framed engravings of venerable conventions long ago passed to rest, and place in their stead a simple print of a flower the children have studied, or the portrait of some one with whom the children are familiar.

In one of the higher grades of a New York school I was charmed to find the ingenuity that had been at work among the boys. On the west were two large relief maps made by two boys. Between these was a picture of Washington, drawn by another. All of the geometrical contrivances for demonstrating theorems were made by the pupils and hung on the east wall. A shield of dark brown wood was inlaid with the number of the school in lighter wood, and made as artistic a whole as possible. This also was the workmanship of the boys. The atmosphere of the room was essentially masculine.

A girls' room had boxes of flowers, each girl planting and experimenting with a different seed. Appropriate lettering was under the management of another pupil.

Several pictures on subjects under the class' consideration were hung at different lengths and framed in the following simple and effective manner:

A large piece of square cardboard had had a round piece cut from the center leaving a frame of required dimensions; this had been covered with colored silk that blended with the room. I have seen the same method used in triangular and oval shaped frames cut out of heavy wall paper, in dull shades, and not covered at all.

An active interest on the part of the teacher, and time to execute it, will, in a wonderfully short time, arouse a corresponding enthusiasm in the pupils.—School Journal.
