Yet in my dreams I see your face. And as of old my heart is moved, By love's resistless power. Once more, I feel the tender caress That thrilled my heart into perfect life, and taste again the exquisite bliss, And know the deep unwavering faith Of that too happy hour. hear, as then, your loving tone, And feel the clasp of your strong hand, girl's heart is not made of stone And how could I such love withstand. Or send you, dear one, away! could not-when your eyes sought mine, To read in them my love for you, When I read your message, half divine, And believed my lover brave and true, I could not say you may. You called me your own your bonny bride, And whispered love words low and sweet. You said my place was by your side-Your arm would stay my fait'ring feet, Your breast my refuge be. But, love, the years have flown away. Into time's unfathomable abyss, Our brightest hopes are cold and gray,

And I know no more the exquisite bliss .Of being loved by thes. I try to think it is better so, Though my heart still yearns for its king,

Whom I worshipped in the long ago, And I cannot hush the murmuring Of a love that will not die. Dear heart, perhaps we'll know sometime Why happiness was here denied, When we reach the other fairer clima, When we cross the darkly swelling tide.

Between us, and the Bye and Bye,

Denting
