

What Ails You?

Do you feel weak, tired, despondent, have frequent headaches, coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in morning, "heart-burn," belching of gas, acid risings in throat after eating, stomach gnaw or burn, foul breath, dizzy spells, poor or variable appetite, nausea at times and kindred symptoms?

If you have any considerable number of the above symptoms you are suffering from biliousness, torpid liver with indigestion, or dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is made up of the most valuable medicinal principles known to medical science for the permanent cure of such abnormal conditions.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is not a patent medicine or secret nostrum, a full list of its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper and attested under oath. A glance at these will show that it contains no alcohol, or harmful habit-forming drugs.

HEART CUT OPEN BY SAW.

Resident of Roberdel Mill Village Instantly Killed While Operating Wood Saw at His Home.

Rockingham, Jan. 21.—At Roberdel No. 2, a mill town 3 miles from here on the Seaboard, Mr. W. S. Dunn was instantly killed about 11 o'clock yesterday morning while operating a wood saw in his back yard. By some means the supports holding the saw gave way, causing the saw to plunge with such force against Mr. Dunn, as to cut his body open from the left shoulder down to the ribs on his right side, his heart being almost cut in two. The accident was witnessed by members of his family.

Mr. Dunn was born near here 36 years ago, but for the past few years had lived at Duke. Recently he moved to Roberdel No. 2, and had purchased his wood saw since Christmas. He leaves a wife and four children. Being a member of the Masons, Odd Fellows and Woodmen of the World, his burial will be conducted by these orders.

The RED MOUSE A Mystery Romance By WILLIAM HAMILTON OSBORNE

Copyright, 1909, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

"What is it?" asked his young wife, trembling with horror. Chalmers gripped her arm. "I did not kill Richard Hargrave!" he cried in sudden joy. "No, I did not kill him!" Miriam tried to soothe him. "No," he evidently under great excitement. "I did not kill him. Five years ago everything was muddled. Life was a middle then, and on that night at Cradlebaugh's everything was easy. But now it's as clear as day. I can see it—I do see it!" He lifted his arm, his forefinger crooked significantly. "I shot—"

"Yes," she said eagerly, "you shot—" "I shot at Hargrave, but I did not hit him. It's all come back. I can see it now." And, pointing toward the junction of the side wall and the ceiling, he went on to explain: "The bullet lodged in the panel of the wall. Hargrave put up his arm like this. I meant to hit him, and I shot, but I didn't hit him. I toppled over in the big chair. He started toward the door. I remember that. It's all come back to me."

"Dead!" His voice rang out in astonishment. She placed her finger on her lips. "Why, he died in the county jail not long after I was tried!" exclaimed Chalmers, who was now reading the newspaper clipping. "Well, I never killed Hargrave." He leaned over and kissed a tiny bit of ruff. "I'm going to prove it for you and the little one."

"Laurie," insisted Miriam, "are you sure?" "I was never surer of anything in my life than this," replied Chalmers. "I tell you, it has all come back to me like a flash. It was you, little one," he said, bending once more over something imaginary in his arm. "that brought it back to me."

Miriam had watched him closely. "Yes, yes," she conceded, "it is true; I can see it—I know," and, sobbing, dropped her head upon his shoulder. "I've got to prove it," he repeated over and over again, patting her head affectionately.

"But—Murgatroyd—why, if you were innocent," suddenly cried Miriam. "Well," he said, "I never killed Hargrave." "He ought to know it." "What do I care about Murgatroyd? What do I care about anybody but you and the little one that is coming-coming to you and to me?" "Laurie," breathed Miriam softly, "I'm happy, oh, so happy! I know—"

"It is true, I can see it—I know." I felt somehow that things would come out right. I don't care whether you ever prove this—so long as we know, Happy? she repeated as she nestled closer to him. "I should think so, with $500 in the bank and a small business—and, after awhile." "The most important thing now is that I'm certain I did not kill Hargrave. That makes it easy for you—the next important thing—for you—my baby—my little baby."

opinion of assurance in your case. He had stolen $10,000 from Cradlebaugh's and had been threatened with prosecution for it. He had to replace the money. The opportunity came, and he seized it. He knew that you hated Hargrave, knew that there was a motive on your part, knew that you shot and missed, knew that Hargrave had a lot of money on his person, and he set out to get it. It was safe. He got it, and Hargrave, too, shot him dead with another gun after you missed him and paid back the money to Cradlebaugh's."

Miriam burst out: "And you have known this for years?" "Yes," he told her quietly, his eyes wandering over Miriam's face, "but it's plain to me now that you haven't known it."

"How should we?" protested Chalmers. Murgatroyd frowned; then he answered: "How? Because I advised your counsel, Thorne, and he was present when the order releasing you was signed. It was his duty, not mine, to communicate with you."

"Thorne—Thorne knew," cried Miriam. "He never told us," came finally from Chalmers's lips. "Possibly he didn't dare," explained Murgatroyd, with an enigmatical smile. "Just at that time Thorne and Thorne's crowd held the public in the hollow of their hands. So perhaps," he added sarcastically, "the news about Penman was suppressed for the public good."

"And you—" spoke up Shirley, her eyes flashing, but got no further, for Murgatroyd went on addressing Chalmers. "I had no trouble then, of course, in setting you free."

Chalmers blinked stupidly at the prosecutor, but Miriam's face at once was wreathed in smiles, for she knew that their future happiness was assured—that the name of Chalmers would be cleared of its stain. But Shirley was not yet satisfied, and her eyes were blazing as she exclaimed hotly: "It was not you who set him free! The law set him free! He was innocent, and—" She paused and drew a deep breath before going on, "You took a million dollars to set him free!"

Murgatroyd rose suddenly. "This is the second time this charge has been made against me, once at the trial and again here. You understand the nature of this charge?" he asked Shirley, looking her charge? "In the eyes. 'What proofs have you?' Shirley pointed to Miriam. "Mrs. Chalmers is my proof." (To Be Continued.)

CAUSES DEBILITY. Here Are Facts Backed Up by a Strong Guarantee. Catarrh causes debility. In our opinion, most people suffering from general debility have catarrh. Such cases of debility cannot be completely cured by medicine not designed to eradicate catarrh. In every case where our remedy fails to give entire satisfaction we will not charge a cent for the medicine employed during the trial. Now, surely no one should hesitate to believe us or to put our claim to a practical test under such conditions. We will take all the risk; no one else can lose anything by the transaction.

We make these statements and this offer because we know and have time and again proved that Rexall Mucuo-Tone rarely fails to do as we claim. It is not a cure-all prescribed to cure every disease that flesh is heir to. It is intended for one purpose, i. e., to cure catarrh by assailing the diseased condition in a reasonable, scientific way, which is to employ agents that have been found to have the tonic and alterative power to correct faulty metabolism (tissue change) and to stimulate and help nature overcome the cause or causes of catarrh. This being done, appetite increases, nutrition improves, weight is gained, comfort of body is attained and life's work taken up with the zest natural to the perfectly healthy individual.

GUN COTTON. A Peculiar Characteristic of This Terrible Explosive.

Mary and odd are the materials exploring into the manufacture of modern explosives, but perhaps the most interesting of all these elements of destruction as well as the simplest is gun cotton. The gun cotton manufacturing industry is large, as enormous quantities are used in the charging of torpedoes and for similar purposes.

The base of gun cotton is pure raw cotton or even cotton waste, such as is used to clean machinery. This is steeped in a solution of one part of nitric and three parts of sulphuric acid. It is the former ingredient that renders the mass explosive, the sulphuric acid being used merely to absorb all moisture, thus permitting the nitric acid to combine more readily with the cellulose of the cotton.

After being soaked for several hours in the solution described the cotton is passed between rollers to expel all nonabsorbed acid, a process carried to completion by washing the cotton in clear water. This washing process is a long one, requiring machinery which reduces the cotton to a mass resembling paper pulp. Should any nonabsorbed acid be allowed to remain it would decompose the cotton.

If the explosive is to be used after the manner of powder it is still further pulverized and then thoroughly dried, but if intended for torpedoes it is pressed into cakes of various shapes and sizes—disk shaped, cylindrical, flat squares and cubes. When not compressed gun cotton is very light, as light as ordinary batting.

A peculiar characteristic of this terrible explosive is that a brick of it when wet may be placed on a bed of hot coals, and as the moisture dries out the cotton will flake and burn quietly. If dry originally, however, the gun cotton will explode with terrific force at about 320 degrees of heat.

In general it is the custom to explode gun cotton by detonation or an intense shock instead of by heat. In a torpedo the explosive charge is wet, this wet cotton being exploded by means of dry cotton in a tube, this having been fired by a cap of fulminate of mercury, the cap itself having been fired by the impact of the torpedo against the target.—Harper's Weekly.
