THE METHODISTS OF THE WORLD IN CONFERENCE.

Baltimore Sun. Methodism was born in a great missionary movement, and for more than a century has gone marching on its way around the globe. From the days of Wesley it has observed the call to go into all the world, and has done its part in bringing nearer the time when the Gospel shall be preached to every living creature. Its enlistment of men of every land and tongue is exemplified in the Ecumenical Conference now in session at Toronto. Seventeen countries are represented by the 500 delegates, and the statisticians assert that the various bodies of Methodists now embrace 9,000,000 communicants, with 30,000,000 adherents under Methodist influence.

No Protestant denomination has shown more remarkable growth than the Methodists, and there appears to be little ground for pessimism in regard to the future. Dr. H. K. Carroll pointed out in an address at Toronto that in the past decade there has been an increase of but 437,562, or 15 per cent., compared with 1,261,209, or 33 per cent., in the decade ending in 1891. But this is only relative, and a denomination that can show a net increase of over 400,000 in 10 years is certainly moving forward. While conditions in England are not so favorable as in America, according to the accounts of Rev. Simpson Johnson and Rev. Henry Haigh, the reports from the mission fields are more than gratifying. Rev. William Williams declares that "every tenth person in Australia is a Methodist," while the conferences in China, Japan, India, Africa and other mission fields have a membership of 708,105, 1,444,292 adherents and 458,165 in the Sunday schools. There are 2,528 missionaries in active service, while there are 52,978 ordained ministers in the home conferences, the consecrated captains who lead a vast army of worshippers.

Americans are taking a leading part in the conference, which is held on this continent for the first time, and the Southerners are particularly prominent. Bishop A. W. Wilson, of Baltimore; Bishop Eugene Hendrix, Bishop E. E. Hoss, of Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. T. H. Lewis, of Westminster, Md., and Bishop John C. Kilgo, of Durham, N. C., are among the speakers.

The address of President Lewis, of the Methodist Protestant General Conference, for a union of all American Methodists into one body was an eloquent plea for a closer co-operation of the 17 separate bodies which now bear the Methodist name. Heretofore neither the efforts for "organic union" nor for consolidation have been entirely successful. But whether the Methodists maintain their distinctive organizations or unite in one immense body, they will continue to be one of the most virile and energetic divisions of the church militant.

NEW PLAN FOR RAISING PRICE OF COTTON.

Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce Urges Each Citizen of Town to Buy Bale of Cotton—"The Cause of the Farmer the Cause of All." Fayetteville Dispatch, 17th.

The Fayetteville chamber of commerce is the originator of a plan to elevate the price of cotton to a figure allowing a fair remuneration to the producer. This plan is contained in a resolution passed by the chamber urging each citizen of Fayetteville, merchant or clerk, manufacturer or mechanic, tradesman or professional man who can, by any possible means do so, to buy at least a bale of cotton on the Fayetteville market and as long as he is able to do without the funds invested in it to let that bale stand before his door as a sign of his friendly co-operation with the producer of the South's greatest crop. It is estimated that if southern towns and cities generally would adopt this plan at least 300,000 would be bought by individuals who are not cotton buyers and that probably half of this amount would be held until spring. This it is pointed out by the chamber of commerce, would not only appreciably raise the price of the fleecy staple but would bring about a new era of increased good feeling and co-operation between the town and country. "The cause of the farmer," says the chamber of commerce, "is the cause of all." When the farmer suffers the whole country suffers. The merchants and business men generally are taking hold of the matter heartily and confidently believe the far-reaching plan of the chamber of commerce will be successful. Fayetteville appeals to her sister towns and cities of the South if all of them co-operate in this movement there is little doubt that the price of cotton will advance to a good paying figure.

She Whipped the Bully.

Pittsburg Dispatch to New York World. Just because she "enforced discipline" and thrashed nine husky boys in a grand melee, Miss Roberta Atkinson may lose her place in the Sandy Creek school, near here. Several angry farmers have asked the Penn township school board to dismiss the pretty and athletic teacher for whipping their sons.

She has been offered already several positions at a higher salary in localities where the schoolboys need "physical training." Miss Roberta has not been long at Sandy Creek. The oldest of her scholars, taller and stronger than she is, determined to do as they were kind and patient. Then the bully of the school was extremely impertinent. He wears cowhide boots and homespun clothes and is big enough to work at piano moving.

Smiling, Miss Roberta moved swiftly toward him. "Swish!" "Swish!" A brand-new rattan whistled down on his legs; he was too surprised to move before he had received half a dozen strokes of the rattan. He tried to seize it, to grapple Miss Roberta; wielding her rattan dexterously, she kept him at its length rapping him on his calves, his knuckles—anywhere.

At first his eight classmates grinned to see the bully "getting his." Then, in answer to his howls for help, they rushed on Miss Roberta. Intrenched behind a desk, she met them. She smote them even as Sampson smote the Philistines. There was hitting in the clinches and catch-as-catch can wrestling, but after about three minutes of furious combat the brave Miss Roberta remained mistress of the field.

"Boys, do I win?" she asked, smiling forgivingly as she did up her hair. "Ye—es, teacher," the nine chorused, stammering. "Then be good and there will be no reason for me to be cross with you again," she said. "Cross!" Great Scott, I'd hate to see her real mad," whimpered the bully, rubbing his knuckles.

Wife Too Respectable.

Hartford, Conn., Oct. 14.—"Tillie, the respectability of living with you drives me mad. I never should have married a nice girl like you." This was one of the curious bits of testimony given in the Superior Court this afternoon by Mrs. Matilda A. Kingsley, daughter of the late Col. William Donaghe, one of Hartford's richest citizens, and at the end of her dramatic recital Judge Gardner Greene told Joseph L. Barbour, her attorney, that she might have a decree of absolute divorce. Her husband is Edward A. Kingsley, a professor of vocal music in Boston.

A TRUST ISSUE THAT COMES IN TO EVERY HOUSE.

Baltimore Sun.

Americans consume some 7,360,000,000 pounds of sugar a year. An advance of a single cent a pound amounts to $73,000,000. The Sugar Trust has raised the price until the consumer has to pay more for this necessity than he has paid in twenty years. According to the estimate of the Springfield Republican, this means a tax of $7.50 on every family. In reality it means much more than that, for we must pay more for our cakes, candies, preserves, jams and everything in which sugar is used.

The refiners promise no relief—in fact, they tell us the price is likely to go higher. Their explanation is that there is a "world shortage in sugar"; that the cane crop in Cuba and the beet crop in Germany have failed; and while Russia has a million tons surplus, that local laws prohibit its exportation. This is poor consolation for the consumer. He refuses to accept the word of a corporation that has ruthlessly crushed out competitors, whose former officials deceived their own stockholders, whose employees were caught redhanded cheating the Government out of custom dues. Whether justified or not, there is a general feeling that the trust has seized upon this pretext to mulct the consumers. The juggling of prices up and down strengthens the impression that manipulation as much as shortage accounts for present market conditions.

Trust methods are well illustrated in Louisiana. That State has produced, according to the New Orleans Picayune, "one of the best crops, if not the largest, in its history." If there is a scarcity of raw sugar, its planters have a right to expect high prices. They must sell to the trust, as it controls the refineries and markets. Yet the trust, the Picayune says, pays much less for raw sugar delivered at its refinery in New Orleans than it does for foreign sugar delivered at New York. "The excuse for this discrimination," says the Picayune, "is that if the producers of Louisiana had to ship their sugars to New York they would have to pay the freight and charges." This is the system of monopoly. Possessing the power to fix prices, the producer is paid as little as possible, while the consumer is charged "all the traffic will bear."

A Congressional committee is now investigating the Sugar Trust, and it should not be misled by any cooked-up crop statements. All the conditions should be investigated. The trust exists in apparent violation of the Sherman law. Whether the present prices are justified or not, no corporation should be allowed to exercise such tremendous power, being able to tax at will our 90,000,000 people. If Mr. Taft does not order an investigation, and if the Department of Justice does not prosecute, the President cannot complain if the people are convinced that he has again failed in his duty to the consumer. And they will know what to do next year when they remember that a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress can give them relief by a change in the tariff laws.

Mr. Green's Idea of the Cotton Situation.

Marshville Our Home. Being asked what he thinks of the cotton situation State Organizer-Lecturer J. Z. Green, of the Farmers Union, said to the Home reporter: "There isn't anything the matter with the cotton market except heavy selling in September. The farmers themselves are responsible—and every man who has put a bale of cotton on a falling market has helped to depress the price. They have simply allowed themselves to be stampeded—that's all. When we learn to feed the cotton market just as fast as the market is hungry for cotton, and no faster, these extreme fluctuations in the price of cotton will be a thing of the past. The only way to get the price of cotton back up to fifteen cents is to keep it off the market until the market gets hungry enough to pay that price." And since the crazy rush of cotton to market has been stopped we begin to see the effects, even in ten days time. The price on the New Orleans market advanced two dollars a bale yesterday. An intelligent farmer, who has any of the elements of method about him, ought to be ashamed to be seen on the streets with a bale of cotton, at present prices."

A CERTAIN RICH MAN.

Youth's Companion.

"Every year he invested not less than twelve hundred dollars in charity, and invested it so secretly, so unobtrusively and so honestly that he was never suspected of being a philanthropist, and never praised for his generosity.

"He pensioned an old, outcast woman and a disabled veteran soldier.

"He sent two little negro boys to school, and for three years supported a family of five persons who could not support themselves.

"He contributed anonymously to every charity in the city. Every old maid interested in a "benevolent object" received his aid; every child that he knew exacted and received penny tolls from his tenderness.

"He supported with encouragement and affection the heart of every man that confided in him. He literally did forgive his enemies, and he was ever one of the largest bondholders in heaven."

These words were written of an aged minister who died not long ago. The writer was his widow, who, in the remarkable document quoted above, thus names the assets which her husband accumulated during a long life of toil and of riding the circuit. As for money on hand at the time of his death, he had two dollars and thirty-five cents in his purse and one hundred and sixteen dollars in the bank. In addition, he had a few books, and a coffin in which to be buried.

This is the inventory of the estate of a rich man. The few dollars in the bank did not constitute his wealth. The real wealth of the man consisted of things that could not be bought or sold or deposited in a bank. They greatly enrich who suppose this man to have been poor. He lived rich in the experiences that brought joy to many hearts; he died rich in accumulations of goodness and unstinted affection.

There are various measures of wealth, none of them wholly false. Money has its value, and it is an important value. Money is like a storage battery, for it enables a man who has ten dollars to do instantly five men's work for a day. It is folly to despise money, or to talk as if it ought to be disregarded. But the wealth in the world is not all to be measured in terms of money, nor is it capable of being purchased with money. Love, joy, simple goodness are the pure gold of life, and are the assets that underlie the investments of all those who are "bondholders in heaven."

One who has been a friend to little children, who has pitied the poor, cared for the widow and the orphan, given freely and unostentatiously to the extent of twelve hundred dollars a year, who dies with his debts paid, and who leaves behind him two dollars and thirty-five cents in cash and one hundred and sixteen dollars in the bank, has lived well and died rich.

A Serious Cotton Disease (Anthracnose) and How to Handle It.

There is a disease of cotton which is yearly attracting increased attention throughout the cotton belt. It is known as cotton anthracnose.

It is most easily recognized when on the boll, where it forms ulcer-like spots, which, as they age, become pink in the centers. The spot may enlarge so as to effect the whole boll. The diseased part of the boll usually falls to open and often the contents rot. Entomologists have received almost daily at the Experiment Station concerning this disease. It has been especially severe in Alabama and Georgia during recent years, so severe in the latter State that the legislature has made special appropriation for its investigation.

Although the disease is seen and recognized most prominently on the bolls, it also occurs on the leaves and stems. Cotton growers should know that this disease is carried from season to season on the seed, and that seed from a sick boll, even though very slightly diseased, may raise a diseased plant, and this in turn may spread the disease to the whole crop of the next season. There is no satisfactory treatment, and the one point to be remembered is that seed from diseased fields is likely to carry the disease, in fact, almost sure to do so. Even seed from clean fields which has passed through a gin in which diseased cotton has been ginned is dangerous. It is of utmost importance for the grower to be sure that his cotton seed does not come from a field or from a region where this disease prevails.

A Gentle Hint.

Claude and Phillis.

Human Life. They watched the waves creeping up at Winkleton-on-sea; the maid was fair beyond compare, and smart and dapper he. Sweet silence reigned until the moon at last came in to view, and then they sighed, and fled—and lied, as seaside couples do.

"My name is Claude Plantagenet," he whispered in her ear. "My pa has lots of racing yachts; he is, of course, a peer."

"And mine is Phillis Mabel Vane," replied the blue-eyed girl. "My pa is dead, and so," she said, "my brother Vere's the earl."

They listened to the distant band; they watched the stars above. He squeezed her hand (you'll understand!) and both confessed their love. Oh, they would fly to far off lands if only they had wings; and the passers-by remarked, "My eyes ain't they soft, spooney things!" "We'll meet tomorrow," was declared with fervency by both; and trinkets and trawls changed hands—a plain, true token of their troth. To Claude she gave her ruby brooch—"Worth fifty pounds, you know." His tie-pin she bore off with three big diamonds above.

Ah, me! They never met again, runs the way of fate! Both quite forgot the fixed-on spot or 'praps got there too late. But William Potts now knows those beads aren't stones of pigeon's blood; and Emma Binks, too, more than thinks that tie-pin is "a dud."
