CHARGE HEINOUS CRIME.

Baptist Precher, Held for Murder of Fiancee—Cyanide of Potassium Used.

Boston, Oct. 20.—A narrow cell in Charles Street jail tonight holds the Rev. Clarence Virgil Thompson Richeson, the young pastor of the Immanuel Baptist church, Cambridge, who was arrested today for the alleged murder of pretty Avia Linnell, of Hyannis, Mass., to whom he had been engaged.

His commitment to jail this afternoon without bail on a charge of first degree murder marked a temporary end to a chain of circumstances which police detectives have followed assiduously since the death of Miss Linnell last Saturday by cyanide of potassium poisoning.

Miss Linnell, who was 19 years old and a student at the conservatory of music, was found dead in the bathroom of the Young Women's Christian Association home here. At first the police believed that she had committed suicide, but later developments indicated that she had knowingly taken cyanide of potassium sent her by some other person in the belief that it would remedy her embarrassing physical condition.

For several days the police inquiry made little progress, but information received early today that Mr. Richeson had purchased cyanide of potassium at a drug store in Newton led the officers to decide upon his arrest. A dozen officers, headed by Deputy Superintendent Watts, were forced to maintain an eight-hour vigil outside the fashionable home in Brookline of Moses Grant Edmunds, where the clergyman had been staying during the past week, before the minister was taken into custody, however. Repeated pulls at the door bells, rappings and shouts failed to bring any response from those within the house through the night and the police who were without a warrant were unwilling to make a forcible entrance.

The deputy superintendent and his assistants, with a crowd of newspaper men, remained on guard until 7 a. m., when they were admitted. Mr. Edmunds is the father of Miss Violet Edmunds, for whose marriage to Mr. Richeson on October 31 cards had been issued. These invitations were recalled today. The Edmunds family, however, maintains faith in Mr. Richeson, and the only announcement in connection with the withdrawing of the cards was that the marriage had been postponed.

The setting of October 31 as the date for a further hearing of Mr. Richeson developed a coincidence in the fact that the day is that on which he was to have been married. But neither the announcement of the date nor any other happening in connection with his arrest seemed to disturb the prisoner.

Even when faced by William Hahn, the Newton druggist, who declared that Richeson had purchased cyanide of potassium from him a week ago Tuesday—the minister was unperturbed apparently. As Hahn was shown into the room at police headquarters Richeson stepped forward and shook his hand. It was noticeable that the druggist was more moved than the accused man. Facing the clergyman, Hahn, who has known Mr. Richeson for several years, told how Richeson walked into his store Tuesday morning, October 10, and said:

"I've got a dog at home that is creating a disturbance. She will be a nuisance unless I can kill her soon."

Mr. Hahn said that he responded to Richeson: "I never knew you had a dog," and that Richeson replied that he kept it in his room. Inquiry by the police where Mr. Richeson roomed developed the presence only of a male dog owned by the landlord, who said Richeson had never owned a dog during the eight months he had lodged there.

Hahn said that he first suggested chloroform to Mr. Richeson but the minister wanted "something that will work quick."

Cyanide of potassium was mentioned as acting instantly and the druggist said he gave Richeson enough to kill three dogs, but the minister asked for more and the preparation finally amounted to enough to poison ten men. As Mr. Richeson turned to go Hahn says the clergyman reminded him of his coming wedding to Miss Edmunds and said: "Don't forget to come," adding, "It must seem mysterious to you about my buying this, but you can keep a secret."

This story brought to Chief Inspector Dugan of the Boston police by Hahn's attorney led to Richeson's arrest. In an official statement regarding Richeson's arrest Superintendent Watts said he found the minister in bed and awake, but looking disturbed. He trembled as he dressed after he had been told he would have to go to police headquarters and be charged with the murder of Miss Linnell. He was allowed to talk privately with Mr. Edmunds and later went into the room where Violet Edmunds lay ill and unresponsive by the shock, to say farewell. As he bent over to caress Miss Edmunds the girl burst into tears and threw her arms about his neck. She said nothing but clung to him convulsively. Richeson comforted her, saying, "Don't cry, dear, don't cry. Everything

MEETS DEATH ON WING.

Eugene Ely's Name Added to List of Aviation Victims.

Macon, Ga., Oct. 19.—Eugene Ely, a well-known aviator was fatally injured at the State fair grounds this afternoon shortly after 3 o'clock when his aeroplane refused to rise after a sensational dip and plunged with him 50 feet to the ground.

In the presence of nearly eight thousand people he fell to the middle of the enclosure of the mile track, almost clearing the machine by a desperate leap that he made when he realized his peril. His body was broken in a score of places and he died eleven minutes after the fatal fall. Just before the end he regained consciousness and muttered:

"I lost control—I know I am going to die."

Ely made a remarkable flight this morning, shortly before noon, ascending to an altitude of 3,100 feet. At 2:45 o'clock, he began his second flight, of the day, rising gracefully from the track enclosure which he circled in a few minutes, traveling at about 30 miles an hour. As he was completing the circle he made one of his famous dips apparently to startle the thousands beneath him who were watching with straining eyes.

The bird-like machine shot down with tremendous velocity, the crowd applauded, thinking that the aviator would rise as he had done once or twice before. But Ely seemed to lose his grip on the lever for the machine continued its downward plunge to the earth.

Realizing his peril, Ely released the lever altogether and half jumped, barely clearing the aeroplane as it crashed to the ground. It was de molished, flying bits of wood and metal flying hundreds of feet. Ely struck with terrific force.

Scores rushed across the track to where he lay, a broken, bloody, inert mass, to offer him aid. He was tenderly removed from beneath the wreckage which covered him. The vast crowd, excited and curious, rushed forward but was kept in order by the police. Efforts were made to resuscitate the aviator, but he only regained consciousness a moment before his death. Even in his unconscious state the physical agony was manifest.

Every Little Battle.

"The Benitowne Bard" in the Baltimore Sun.

Every little battle that you win in manhood's war Added to another makes a little victory more.

Every little battle That you face with sweet content, Makes the bright sky brighter That is o'er you sweetly bent.

Every little battle that you win against yourself Adds another hero to the crusade against self.

Every little battle Brings you nearer to the goal Of honest, upright living In the simple faith of soul.

Every little battle that you undertake against wrong Brings life a little closer to the silver founts of song.

Every little battle That you make for sake of right Brings the world a little nearer To the truth and to the light.

"Why does the giraffe have such a long neck?" asks the teacher.

"Because its head is so far away from its body," hopefully answers the boy—Judge.

Windows sealed to keep out the cold air; or worse yet, sleeping for a few nights in a bedroom with windows closed, because the blankets have been put away and it is too chilly to sleep without them, is quite sufficient to overflow the balance and give the microbes the upper hand. Then a draft really is harmful—at least the little draft that creeps round the sash of the closed window or through the crack under the door. The way to make it innocuous is to increase the size of it, to open the windows and the door, and let the air sweep through in great volume, as it did in the summer. If the autumn air is too crisp, put on an overcoat, but do not shut the windows until you are forced to do so by snow or hard frost; and then do not shut them completely or keep them shut all the time.

JOHN ROBINSON'S SHOWS.

The Enormous Cost of Equipment and Maintenance of This Big Aggregation.

There are always many curious facts about the great tented shows and here are some of them about the John Robinson Ten Big Shows combined which will be here on Saturday, October 28th.

The amount of energy required to put up and take down this show daily, if directed in erecting a building would be sufficient to erect the tallest skyscraper in the largest city.

The amount of food consumed at the three daily meals with the show is more than is used by the largest hotel in the country and more varied.

Should the three trains that transport the show from town to town be made up in one train it would be over 2,700 feet in length. There is as much flour used daily to blit this show as is used daily in an ordinary bakery and more than is used in the very largest families in ten years.

The total salary list is larger than that of any ordinary commercial house. The salaries range from $10,000 per month to $50,000 per month.

The enormous sum of $3,500 has to be taken in each day before the show starts getting money for itself. Of this $3,500 nearly all of it is spent in the town where the show exhibits.

The stable of horses is insured for $1,000,000. The menagerie is insured for twice this amount.

There are over 100 rare animals in the menagerie and in capturing them over twenty men lost their lives. A fortune was spent in their purchase and an independent fortune has been spent in the maintenance of them.

Contracts with performers are often made ten years in advance and this show has made it a rule never to make a contract for more than one year's duration thus insuring new acts each year.

Over one hundred and fifty million people have seen the show since the first day its exhibited and no other three shows in the world ever catered to a like number of patrons.

JACKSON IN WAR TIMES.

Mother of Soldiers First Prayed Against Him, Then Fervently for Him.

Roanoke (Va.) News.

R. E. Lee Camp of Confederate Veterans, of Richmond, has been discussing Miss Mary Johnston's book, "The Long Roll." The veterans, and especially the chaplains, object to the quantity of profanity ascribed in the book to the Confederate soldiers, particularly to General Ewell; and all seem to take umbrage at the description of the personal peculiarities of Stonewall Jackson, such as his fondness for lemons, his habit of jerking his left hand into the air, his fits of profound silence, his reticence and his occasionally harsh discipline.

It is useless, however, to attempt to parade the Confederate Army as an army of saints. Probably it contained a larger proportion of earnestly pious men than any army put in the field since Cromwell's day, but it had its share of rapacious and hot-blooded, careless-talking, fighting men, not always as particular in their language as they should have been. In fact, some of the old scouts to this day lack circumspection in their conduct and conversation, and sometimes do and say things for which we hope their gray heads are bowed in reverent contrition and in honest, humble purpose of amendment.

As to General Jackson, those of us who can recall the early days of the war know that among the women and children at home there was deep distrust of him and a widespread belief that he was a madman. This must have come from the letters from the soldiers in camp. The writer recalls that his grandmother, with two sons in the Second Regiment of the Stonewall brigade, had the habit of locking herself in an upstairs room at "the Parsonage" down in Hanover county, and praying for a solid hour daily for deliverance of those sons from General Jackson. Whether the old lady really prayed for Stonewall's death or merely for his resignation was a matter between herself and her Maker, but after the valley campaign her family devotions and presumably her private prayers contained very warm invocations for the life and health and success of General Jackson.

There is also recollection that on an occasion the fine old lady in the fervor of her supplications lost the key to the room in which she had secluded herself, and it was necessary to remove her backward down a ladder from a second-story window, with the assistance of two plantation hands, who, with the negro sense of humor, were unable to restrain occasional guffaws at the predicament of "ole Miss," while her daughters below were forced to crack their ribs in silent agonies of laughter; and when they could control their voices to adjure her, in carefully modulated tones, to be careful. The descent was not of a character which would take a prize at a hook and ladder demonstration of a fireman's parade.

We hope there will be many editions of "The Long Roll" and that in the later ones some of the swearing will be omitted. General Ewell, we are told, was converted and became a sincere and consistent Christian, and there is no need to charge up against him the colloquial sins of his earlier days, but there is no use in attempting to denounce as a slander a book which bears every evidence of being photographed in its accuracy, in many respects, because of blemishes which can be remedied.
