WRIGHT'S SUCCESS WITH NEW INVENTION.

Kill Devil Hill, N. C., Oct. 24.—In a fifty-mile gale today Orville Wright went aloft and remained virtually stationary in his glider, with which he is conducting experiments in aerial stability. He was up nine minutes and forty-five seconds and maintained an altitude of approximately 150 feet.

The record breaking "flight" was the seventeenth of a series that began today when the rain ceased. The first glide lasted only 54 seconds, each lengthening until the final one. The sum of the experiment is understood here to mark a long step forward in the science of aviation and to point the way toward solving the problem of automatically preserving the equilibrium of heavier than air machines.

When Lorin Wright and Alexander Oglivie, the English aviator, brought out the machine for the initial flight the wind gauge showed that the gale was 35 miles and freshening. Sand carried by the wind, pelted the aviators, the tiny particles cutting like shot. In the opinion of the experimenters no more trying weather condition under which to make the test of the machine could be found.

The glider was equipped with rear rudder of 24 feet spread. In front, to preserve the balance, a ten-pound bag of sand was swung on the end of rod extending eight feet in front of the aviator's seat. The ailerons or balancing wings on the sides of the machines, was adjusted, and Orville Wright lifted himself into the seat.

"Let it go," he shouted. Lorin Wright and Oglivie thrust the glider into the face of the rising gale and it shot up. Again and again this was repeated, each flight becoming lengthier, until for almost ten minutes Wright soared like a brooding buzzard on the rush of a fifty-mile gale.

Oglivie made several brief flights at the close of the day, but none even approximated the success made by Wright. It was apparent that the maintenance of poise and balance rested as much on the ability and skill of the aviator as upon the mechanical contrivances by which the Wrights hope to minimize the perils of flying. Orville Wright admitted his satisfaction with the results and declared the conditions under which the flight was made were unusually severe.

"There were more different and differing air currents up there," he said, "than I have ever experienced before. It was a novel and exciting experience."

One For Each Face.

A Western politician had quite a reputation in his own town for successful duplicity. It was generally believed that his idea of party principles was to work and vote with the winning side. He once entered the store of a druggist who happened, at the time, to be opposed to him politically.

"I want a jar of face cream," he said.

"Be sanitary, Tom," replied the druggist. "Get two jars."

Consumption

Checked and in Early Stages, Cured by

MILAM

the great Reconstructive tonic and blood renovator

We do not set forth MILAM as a cure for consumption, but it has proven so beneficial to such patients that we believe, and are supported in our belief by a practicing physician, that MILAM will arrest incipient tuberculosis or consumption in its early stages. We know that it greatly benefits even those in the advanced stages.

Scrofulitic Consumption
City of Danville, State of Virginia.—To-wit: I, Edmund B. Meade, Notary Public in and for the City of Danville, State of Virginia, do hereby certify that Abram Word, of Danville, Va., to me well known, did appear before me, and being duly sworn, deposed and says as follows:

"For ten years prior to August, 1909, I was under the care of a regular physician. Last spring this doctor told me he could do me no good, and I tried another for four months without receiving any benefit from him.

In August, 1909, I began taking Milam, and am now able to do my work without difficulty, my appetite is good, and I can eat and digest any food.

My trouble was said to be Scrofulitic Consumption, and I was wasted away to a shadow. I was so weak that I could hardly walk when I commenced on MILAM. I regard MILAM as a truly valuable remedy in all cases of blood trouble, whether eruptive, or proceeding from a lack of full, free circulation.

I have recommended MILAM to about twenty of my friends, and so far as I have seen or heard from them, they all speak in the highest terms of it, and are recommending it to their friends.

It was particularly beneficial to me in aiding digestion and building up an appetite." (Signed) ABRAM WORD.

In witness to the above, I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of my office, this 29th day of March, A. D. 1910. EDWARD B. MEADE, Notary Public. My commission expires Jan. 14, 1914.

HIS OWN HARVEST.

Youth's Companion.

He was too old a man for the place, some said; even those who loved him for his long years of faithful service could not help noticing that when he mounted the pulpit stairs his step was a little unsteady, and that toward the end of the sermon his voice broke now and then.

One Sunday he read the hymn over again after he had given out the notices, and Elder Fenwick frowned at the flutter of fans and the slight titter in the choir-loft.

Elder Fenwick, who had given a hundred dollars toward the new pipe-organ, thought that it did not have a fair chance. The young people, he said, were "drifting off," especially in the evenings; many of the older ones had "lost interest;" the attendance was not what it should be, and all things considered, the church needed a change of pastors.

Not a few agreed with Elder Fenwick, but no one liked to speak to the minister. He had been long among them, this old man with the gray hair and the faltering step. He had baptized children who were now fathers and mothers; he had blessed many of the men and women of the parish at the marriage altar; he had prayed by the sick beds of some who sat weekly in the high-backed pews, and of many more who rested in peace under the green turf of the churchyard nearby.

It was a delicate matter to speak about, but it was "managed"—no matter how. As the old minister stood up for his last service in the church where the best years of his manhood had been spent, his voice quavered more than ever. By his request, it had been made a communion Sunday. At such a service, it seemed to him, he could have the tenderest parting with the people whom he loved so well.

A strange thing happened that day. There was a moment's pause after the sermon and the prayer, for the minister's eyes were too misty to find at once the number in the hymnbook. In the pause a young man in one of the center pews rose to his feet.

"I hope you will let me speak a word," he said, abashed, for the eyes of the whole congregation were upon him, and he was hardly more than a boy.

"I've been thinking since I sat here that—that, when the new minister comes and holds his first communion, a good many will join the church. It is always so. I had intended to be one of them, but—but it doesn't seem fair, when it's Mr. Borden's influence and preaching and the kind of life he's lived that's brought me to decide that way. If it could be arranged so that I could—as late as it is now—I'd like to join today."

The young man's voice died out into a dead silence. The minister called his session together in tones that were subdued and tremulous. There was a stir here and there, as one after another rose and followed the elders to the room above.

Fourteen young people had in their hearts decided upon the step which must mean so much to them in the future; and stirred by the generous thought of the youth who had spoken first, they, too, chose to give the sheaves into the faithful hand that had scattered the seed.

The gray head of the pastor was bowed reverently, while he read the names, as if to receive this baptism of a great joy.

Other hearts grew tender under the influence of the day. When the service was over, a hundred hands grasped the hand of the old pastor, not with the regret that marks a final parting, but with the gladness that belongs to a new welcome.

He Did Not Understand.

Exchange.

Pat had been seized with violent pains and was hurried to a hospital. The physician in charge, after diagnosis, informed him that he had appendicitis, and that an operation was necessary as his appendix must be removed immediately.

Pat had not the least idea of what an appendix was, and so informed the physician, who laughingly told him that after the operation he would leave the appendix in the window so he could see it when he was able to sit up.

Some days after the operation Pat's curiosity got the better of him, and he raised up in bed to take a look at his appendix. To his amazement a monkey was sitting on the window sill, and when he saw Pat he began to make faces and chatter at a great rate.

The astonished Irishman gave the monkey a long, hard look, and then exclaimed: "Don't do that, me boy, don't do that. Can't you see your mother is a very sick man?"

Pretty Tall.

Pat had gone back home to Ireland and was telling about New York.

"Have they such tall buildings in America as they say, Pat?" asked the parish priest.

THE PREVENTION OF COLDS.

Youth's Companion.

The first few days of autumn—not necessarily of the autumn of the calendar, but of autumnal weather—are likely to be marked by an outbreak of colds. Then many who have been free from this disagreeable ailment, and therefore have dismissed all thought of it from their minds, are suddenly forced to recognize that they have noses and mucous membranes.

It is indeed discouraging to find that living all summer virtually in the open air has not apparently made us more resistant to the influences that produce a cold. We have lived in drafts—natural drafts, through open windows and on porches, and artificial drafts made by the electric fan—and never so much as sneezed. Now, with the first drop in the temperature below the point of comfort, we look angrily for the source of the air playing round our heads, pull down the windows, close the doors, and begin to wonder if the weather-strips don't need renewing. Then in a day or two comes the cold, and we blame the air for it. The real cause is the lack of air, or rather the stagnation and impurity of it.

The bacteria which cause colds—there are several varieties of them—are always close by, if not actually in our noses, but they can do us no harm as long as the system, fortified with fresh air and exercise, is able to repress their growth. The balance, however, between the resisting and attacking forces is so nearly even that it takes but little to disturb it, with the result that the system may become the weaker of the two.

When the Frost Comes.

The following interesting data is given by the Chronicle from the figures of the weather bureau at Charlotte. As they fit very well for this section they are very interesting for this locality.

The average date of the first killing frost in autumn, is Nov. 4. The earliest date for killing frost in 33 years was October 8, 1889.

The latest date for killing frost is Nov. 28, 1902.

In the past 17 years, the first killing frost has occurred in October only three times.

In 32 years it has occurred in October but 12 times, therefore the percentage of probable occurrence in the month of October is 38 per cent; the percentage of probable occurrence in November is 100 as killing frosts have always occurred in November. The foregoing figures do not include dates of light or heavy frosts, these being only slightly injurious to vegetation. Light frost has been recorded here as early in the fall as September.

The growing season for this vicinity, that is, from one killing frost in the spring to another in the fall, is an average of 219 days.

REYNARD'S SHREWD HUNTING.

Youth's Companion.

Not long ago a subscriber of the Companion who lives in Utah wrote to tell of seeing a fox catch a chicken by running in circles underneath its roost until the chicken, which constantly turned its head to watch the movements of the fox, became dizzy and fell from its perch. A writer in Forest and Stream thus corroborates this bit of observation:

I was in Pike county, Pennsylvania, a few days ago, when a resident, whose reputation for veracity is excellent, told me a peculiar story. The narrator has been a resident of Pike county for a number of years, and is fond of sport with gun and rod. One day he and a friend were out with their guns, when their attention was attracted by what seemed to be a ruffed grouse—they call them pheasants in Pike county.

The bird was sitting on the lower branch of a large tree, and was turning its head about in a peculiar manner. The two men approached cautiously, and saw a fox under the tree. The fox was walking about in a circle, his path being well defined in the snow, sufficiently so to warrant the belief that he had been engaged in circling about for some time. The eyes of the fox were fixed on the bird, and the latter's eyes followed the fox, this accounting for the peculiar motion of its head.

The men made up their minds that they would shoot the fox, and approached nearer, wholly unobserved by either bird or quadruped. Suddenly the bird, which had been positively identified as a ruffed grouse by this time, dropped to the ground. The fox seized it, and bounded away before the astonished men could bring their guns to their shoulders.

Negro Population in South Carolina.
Pee Dee Advocate.

The recent census shows that there were last year 12,256 white inhabitants of Marlboro county, and 18,930 negroes. This is a little more than three negroes to two white people. In 1900 there were 11,226 white and 16,413 colored. The increase in ten years has been 1,030 white and 2,517 colored. The increase in the ten years has been about five negroes to two whites.

In the whole State the whites have increased more rapidly than the negroes, the percentage of increase being 14 1/2 white, and 1 1/2 negroes. The total population of the State was in 1900: 557,807 white, and 782,509 colored; in 1910 673,162 white, and 836,316 colored.

There are only ten counties in the State that have more whites than negroes. They are Anderson, Cherokee, Chesterfield, Greenville, Horry, Lancaster, Oconee, Pickens and Spartanburg.

Pickens has the fewest negroes, 5,430; and Charleston the most, 56,046. Beaufort has the largest percentage of negroes, 87; and Pickens the smallest, 21. Less than one-fourth of the population of Horry is colored; in Brantley, Barnwell, Beaufort, Berkeley, Calhoun, Clarendon, Edgefield, Fairmont, Georgetown, Lee, and Sumter, there are more than twice as many negroes as whites. In Cherokee, Greenville, Horry, Oconee, Pickens and Spartanburg there are more than twice as many whites as negroes.

The races are nearest even in Lancaster, where there are 13,524 whites, and 13,126 negroes. The city of Charleston has more negroes than whites, and Columbia, Greenville and Spartanburg more whites than negroes.

Only two States in the Union, South Carolina and Mississippi, have more negro inhabitants than whites.

Woman's Foot Growing Larger.
Success Magazine.

Shoe manufacturers claim that the American woman's foot is growing larger. The number two shoe is almost obsolete, they say, and sizes four and five are much commoner than three. The explanation seems to be that the phenomenon is due to the increased use of the feminine foot as a means of locomotion. The constantly increasing number of women engaged in industry and the growing popularity of tennis, golf and walking have had their inevitable result, and common sense has done much to abolish the wearing of pinching shoes. The tradition that small feet are an excellent thing in women has persisted long and will not die without a struggle. Conservatives need not fear that women will carry this matter too far; they know when to stop.

SANE AMID THE MAD.

Attendants in Asylums Seldom Lose Reason, Says Doctor.
Washington Post.

Although forced constantly to associate with insane persons, physicians and nurses at insane asylums lose their reason less frequently than any other class, according to a statement made recently by Dr. George H. Schwin, assistant superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane. It followed the verdict of a jury in the District Supreme Court that Miss Edna Moore, formerly a nurse in an asylum, is now insane and will have to be confined in the Government hospital.

Miss Moore, the daughter of Mrs. Laura Moore, of 620 Sixth street, northwest, and at one time a nurse in a private asylum in Baltimore, went violently insane and on several occasions attempted to commit suicide, according to testimony given at her trial. Her mother stated that her mind had been wrecked through constant association with insane people she attended. She is now closely watched at the asylum to prevent her from taking her own life.

Dr. Schwin, an expert alienist, declared that this is the first case he has ever heard of a nurse or other attendant in an asylum who became mentally unbalanced. Strange as it may seem, he said, people who mingle with crazy people are seldom nervous, and keep their mental balance better than others. The words and actions of the insane have little effect on them, he declared.

"I think there have been very few cases like Miss Moore's," said Dr. Schwin. "Visitors to insane asylums often make the remark that they would soon go crazy if forced to remain with the insane for any length of time. As a matter of fact, insanity is not in any way contagious."

Two months later a bushel of the best dried apples was hauled by the bride herself to the parsonage door. "I don't know as he was worth it," she said, with a twinkle in her eye, "but a bargain is a bargain for all that."
