

THE MARCH OF PROGRESS.

SOON IT CAN BE TOLD
 Secrets which Congressional committees sought to penetrate, but without success, while hearings were being conducted on the Reciprocal Tariff bill, soon will be bared if representatives of foreign governments succeed in negotiating the trade agreements they are eagerly pressing at the State Department.

Immediately after President Roosevelt signed the bill amending the 1930 tariff law, suave spokesmen for European, Asiatic and South American countries visited the State Department and made it known they were ready to "talk turkey" along the line of selling products of many kinds to American consumers.

Germany's representative was one of the first to go into action after the "swapping" tariff bill was signed, but diplomats for certain South American countries were close upon the European traders.

Secretary of State Hull, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Secretary of Commerce Roper and other astute supporters of the so-called reciprocal tariff evaded direct answers to questions asked by Congressmen as to what the Administration proposed to impart in greater quantities from foreign countries. Secretary Wallace did mention "some of the finer lines," but it was apparent that the advocates of the bill were hedging and sparing with their inquirers.

Now, it can and will be told. American industry will soon know what products are going to be involved in the bartering. It was admitted by advocates of the bill that some American industries would be placed at a disadvantage by operation of the trade agreements. Owners of these industries soon will know the worst. Workers in these industries will have their incomes slashed, and perhaps will be thrown out of employment entirely.

From the international standpoint, however, the employment ratio will be balanced, for a German or Chinese workman will be employed for every one thrown out of employment in America.

FALSE LEADERSHIP

As one of the major incidents in the steel controversy, General Hugh S. Johnson refused to treat further with the union leaders who went to Washington with extravagant demands. They were the people who were demanding a general strike to tie up the steel industry and, hence, many dependent industries which are leading the way to recovery.

But General Johnson, who has been praised repeatedly for his fairness in administering the NRA where industrial relations are concerned, found the union leaders "unreasonable and overbearing," to use his words.

"They are rushing in where angels fear to tread," the Administrator said. "The plan I presented to them was a revolutionary advance in the attitude of the steel industry. It offered a way to meet in substance every single demand I have heard in all these days of painful controversy."

"The nub of the difficulty in union representation is establishing that union men have been freely chosen to represent workers. This plan proposed to solve the difficulty. These men rejected that."

At another point the General said: "They misconceived the rights and duties of this Administration. It is an umpire and has no right to impose any particular form of labor organization on any industry or any group of workers. These men sponsor a policy which forbids any local from reaching an agreement with any employers until all locals agree with all employers. This is physically impossible—and yet that is one of the points upon which a strike is threatened."

There, portrayed by the chief of the NRA, is the crux of the controversy. Men who are "unreasonable and overbearing" making demands that are "physically impossible." And because these demands are not met going back to the steel districts to foment trouble and demand a strike in which the public was to be the sufferer.

In this brief description of activities, General Johnson put his finger upon the underlying reason why employers hesitate to permit unionization of their plants; why they oppose such moves as proposed by the Wagner bill to create within the American Federation of Labor a monopoly. These employers through the years have run the same thing that General Johnson encountered. Unreasonable demands. Overbearing attitude. Failure to reckon the necessities of the public welfare. And bitter strife unless demands are met.

WASHINGTON SNAP-SHOTS

Republicans, with a minority in the Senate, virtually controlled the final days of Congress... with the President insistent upon a speedy adjournment they were able to bargain as to what should be enacted, something they have not been able to do since the new Administration took office... their strategic position of being able to talk for several days upon any piece of legislation they disliked was instrumental in scuttling several regimenting measures, including the extension of powers to the Agricultural Department.

The June crop report of the Department of Agriculture on cotton has been awaited anxiously by officials... for the first time farmers will begin to realize how much of their crop is to be a liability rather than an asset under the stringency of the centralized control in Washington.

Concurrently with denials by Dr. Rexford Tugwell that he believed in "national planning," "regimentation," and other brain-children of the College Liberals, news was emanating from Washington that a new move toward nationalization of industry was intended by the Relief Administration by granting funds to open idle factories to place the unemployed at work... this was being carefully guarded pending the adjournment of Congress since the House had previously rejected specifically an allocation of funds to the Postoffice Department to building a factory in West Virginia to engage in competition with private enterprise.

Perhaps the most unexpected development of this session of Congress has been the attacks of Democrats upon the "New Deal" program... while Republicans have hesitated to speak out, the halls of the Senate have rung with outspoken criticism by Senators Glass, Byrd, Bailey, Smith and other Democratic leaders from the South... this opposition within his own party to "Brain Trust" ideas did more than anything else to restrain Mr. Roosevelt from pressing for some of the pending measures and pushing Congress home ward.

The president insured that social legislation will be one of the dominant issues of the Congressional campaigns this Fall by sending to the Hill a message dealing with unemployment insurance, old age pensions and the like shortly after the Republican National Committee had issued its statement in Chicago calling for progress without stretching the Constitution.

CUNINGGIN REUNION

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Sauls attended the Cuninggin Reunion which was held Friday, June 15th, at Rainbow Methodist church in Greene County, near Snow Hill. This old church is about one hundred and fifty years old and was founded by William Henry Cuninggin, a brother of Jessie Cuninggin, who with his wife Lucy Cuninggin gave their lives as missionaries to Brazil. The Mission school for girls there is named the Lucy Cuninggin School in memory of her.

The life of W. H. Cuninggin was read at the reunion. He was the great grand-father of Mrs. Sauls. J. L. Cuninggin, president of Scarritt College, Nashville, Tenn., is the only living member of the family bearing the Cuninggin name and he is president of the Association. Rev. J. M. Armond, Dean of the Ministry, at Duke University, is vice-president of the Association. They were both present. There was special music and a sumptuous dinner was served. The family tree of the Cuninggin's was on display in the church and when completed will be kept at Duke University.

USE GOOD SUGAR FOR GOOD JAMS AND JELLIES

Buying in Cotton Bags Assures Purity and Full Weight

In buying their sugar for canning and preserving this Summer, Southern women should be particular to buy in the 25, 10 or 5-pound cotton bags in which it is packed at the refinery.

There are many good reasons for this, the first being that she knows exactly what brand of sugar she is getting, and can tell whether or not it is sugar that has been refined in this country under the strict United States sanitary conditions, by American labor, under the NRA code—whether it is foreign refined sugar. The cotton bag also keeps the sugar in the same pure, clean state in which it left the refinery.

In addition, when she buys sugar in a cotton bag, she is stimulating the consumption of cotton—the crop upon which the prosperity of the agricultural South largely depends. The Savannah Sugar Refinery at Savannah, Ga., (producers of Dixie Crystals Sugar) alone uses 10,000,000 yards of cotton cloth a year in packing their sugars.

Put up plenty of fruits this summer for use this winter. The price of canned goods, jellies, etc., has gone up materially in recent months, and it is predicted that their prices will go even higher. The more you can do this summer, the more you will save on your food bill next winter.
