Having allowed a fair amount of time to pass since the end of my last relationship, I've spent much time working toward the conclusion that I do want to make a commitment again. But along the way, I realized that there was a plurality of men out there that I could not relate to or be comfortable with (e.g., fans of one-night stands, men who cheat or abuse, those who have raised the mere art of being shallow and self-centered to the level of a true religion, etc.) So, it was not desperation, but this frustrating state of affairs that prompted me to write a personal. If you're interested in meeting someone to whom these examples don't apply, I'll start at the usual beginning: GBM, mid-twenties, 6'2", 177 lbs., black/brown, professional (i.e., gainfully employed white-collar type) and — if I were to listen to others — very good-looking. Seek GWM, mid-twenties to early forties, who agrees that attempting to establish a relationship is serious enough to justify patience on both sides. Would especially like to meet someone who knows himself well enough to not be intimidated by fear of involvement. I'm down-to-earth, warm, compassionate, intelligent, supportive, sensitive, reflective, considerate, funny, sincere, honest and strong — and admire the same qualities in a partner. I like the walks through the woods, long drives, hikes, exploring and animal-watching that goes with being in the country and the avant-garde nightlife, theaters, concerts, museums and galleries, and fast pace that goes with being in the city. Enjoy music (wide variety), reading, architecture, politics, art, films, documentaries, sports, good conversation, listening and learning, warm nights, beaches after dark, staying home with one person who means more than anyone else possibly could, and a great deal more. If this sounds good so far, I'd like the chance to get to know you. Please write with photo/photo (if it be returned) to: J.L.A., PO Box 51371, Raleigh, NC 27609. (1299)
