Daily Vitamin Source—Home Canned Tomatoes

Tomatoes, really a fruit but more often regarded and used as a vegetable, are easy to can at home, and yet few people ever have enough to last through the winter until the next crop comes along. To can, select fresh, firm, sound ripe tomatoes and wash carefully. Scald in small quantities. Using a cheesecloth square to hold the tomatoes and dipping them into hot water is an easy and effective way of scalding. Skin, pack and process as quickly as possible after scalding. Letting the tomatoes stand after scalding is likely to cause flat sour. If exposed to air after skinning they also lose food value. Tomatoes are an important source of Vitamin C (ascorbic acid) which is needed in daily diet for good health. Always cut out the hard cores and green spots before canning and avoid canning tomatoes from which decayed spots and fungus growths have been removed.
The Ball Blue Book recipe for Regular Pack directs that the prepared tomatoes be packed solidly into hot jars. Add one teaspoon salt to each quart. Do not add any liquid. Process 45 minutes in hot water bath. Or, another method given is to boil the prepared tomatoes five minutes, pour into hot jars, add one teaspoon salt to each quart and process 20 minutes in hot water bath.
To can tomatoes whole, prepare them as above, being careful not to cut into the seed pod when removing the core. Pack into hot jars as closely as possible without crushing. Add one teaspoon salt to each quart, and cover with hot tomato juice or puree. Process 35 minutes in hot water bath.

limed with ground limestone then seeded and scratched the seed in with a crab-thorn bush.

Cleve Nichols, of near Sparta, has a right to be proud of his pasture and the good grazing he is getting. A few years ago his pasture fields were galded and mostly covered with shumake bushes. Now after treating with lime and phosphate and a herd of goats you would never realize that his pasture fields were in such a condition. Four cows can be grazed now where only one grazed before.

Carl Andrews, of near Pine Swamp school, seeded a field this spring to ladino clover and grass. The mixture was seeded on poor land with wild grass and broom-sedge sod. Of course lime and fertilizer were applied. Carl is now getting excellent grazing, from what before would not furnish any grazing worth while.

Robert Joines, of Laurel Springs community says, "I want you to come and lay my strip off this fall. I am afraid you will be too busy next spring." Robert is really sold on this system of farming. The Soil Conservation Service assisted Robert last spring in getting most of his crop land in strips.
