CITY ON THE PAMILICO.

In this week's Raleigh Christian Advocate, appears an editorial from the versatile pen of the editor, Rev. T. N. Ivey, D. D., giving an account of his recent visit to Washington.

The idea of taking a train at Raleigh in the late afternoon and reaching Washington on the Pamlico by dark is fascinating to one who has been in the habit of consuming a day, and sometimes a night, in reaching this place.

At 4:25 on last Saturday afternoon I boarded the Norfolk & Southern train at Raleigh. Washington was the objective point. My mission was to preach on the following day to the Washington saints in the absence of the pastor, Rev. M. T. Phipps.

A long wait on the bridge spanning the Pamlico, with the lights of Washington straddling the northern bank for over a mile, and then I found myself in the hands of my friend and acquaintance, Mr. E. R. Mison. Our acquaintance began in the old Williams hotel in Roxboro, in which as a young drummer he lay sick back in the '80s.

Large congregations were found in the church, morning and evening, on Sunday. Their looks, their bearing, and charitable attention betoken intelligence and zeal. That auditorium is one of the finest in Southern Methodism. The acoustic properties are all, surely, that should be desired.

strong. He was a valiant, useful soldier in Christ's army until an unfeeling frame forced him into the superannuate relation. It was a great pleasure to meet many old friends, the mention of whose names is forbidden by the limitations of our space.

Washington is looking to the sunrise in more ways than one. No one can drive over the town without recognizing the fact that the blood of progress is in her veins. The streets, residences, stores and other buildings indicate progress.

FADS AND FASHIONS.

New York, September 11—Never were styles more unsettled and never did the designers and makers of dresses have more freedom to display their inventive genius than at the present time.

The return of the overskirt should be welcomed by the textile manufacturer, as well as the consumer. The use of overskirts means the use of more material in dresses, but it also gives women an opportunity to dress becomingly, as overskirts are invariably becoming to nearly every woman.

Where overskirts are not expressly provided, they are suggested by the cut of the skirt or the manner of trimming, sometimes the deep hip yoke extending down over the pleated flounce in deep points to give a tunic effect.

A significant evidence of a new era in dress is the shorter skirt, which is now seen on quite dressy gowns for afternoon wear. The limp, scant, trailing dirndl skirt is practically a thing of the past.

Among the most appropriate gowns for the college girl is that of the flange guimpe. Since the shirtwaist has been dropped to some extent, as usual at this time of the year, or has been ranked as a useful garment only and has ceased to claim attention as a dressy affair, the guimpe has gained in favor.

Some women consider the guimpe more economical than the shirtwaist, because of the saving in the laundry bill, but it is doubtful whether the guimpe habit is any less expensive, when it is considered that numerous goupes are necessary for one frock and that much greater care is required in their laundering.

The early autumn materials this season show an unusual number of attractive things for the coming costume, likely to be the substance of the young surfaced wools for fall street wear, and very handsome color combinations enter into some of the soft, young, mixed stuffs.

charming piece was of a very soft, dull green which is hard to name, having a dash more of gray tone than reseda. With this medium dark green was mixed very lightly and equally soft bluish amethyst, the faded amethyst that was a Parisian fad during the spring.

Another very successful color scheme was in a smoky gray brown with a mere hint of dull rose red. The mixture of red was so slight that the material was in the least bright or aggressive, yet it added a delightful warmth to the neutral brown and added character.

Not so many buttons are used on the tailored out-door garments for this fall, but the buttons that are used, particularly on dressy coats, are very handsome and quite costly. It is nothing unusual for some of these buttons to cost $2 or $3 a piece.

It is reported from Paris that the large hats now worn have very high crowns with immense choix of wide-moire ribbon. To give the contrast for which every one strives, there is the facing of black velvet. But perhaps the newest note in millinery is sounded in two small models which Paris milliners are showing.

While vanity bags are to be had in every known leather, the light and dark colored suedes are the most popular. The bags are a little smaller than those of a year ago.

AT THE DIXIE.

Tonight closes the engagement of Mr. Ed. Gerken, the whistler, Joker and all-round comedian, at the Dixie. His going is regretted by all who have attended this popular place of amusement during the week.

TO FILL APPOINTMENTS.

Rev. Jesse McCarty passed through the city this afternoon on his way to Aurora and South Creek, to fill his appointments at the Baptist churches Sunday.
