STATE NEWS

Condensed Items of Interest Happening Throughout the State.

Mention has been made of the rapid progress on the work of the large dormitory at the Agricultural and Mechanical College and that the plans have been received for the two model barns which the college will build on its very extensive and well located farm, which is an object lesson in every way. Work has now begun on these barns and silos for engine and they will cost about $12,000 complete. They stand some half a mile southwest from the college and on a prominent place on the farm. They will contain stalls for over 100 cows. The college has a fine herd. Half a mile further westward of the new barns stands a very large one finished last year, which is in the midst of small grain and peas, on which such notably fine crops have been grown this year.

The Supreme Court filed the following opinions: State vs. Wynne, from Washington, reversed; Phelps vs. Davenport, from Washington, new trial; Lumb vs. Company vs. Southern Railway, from Gates county, affirmed; Barden vs. Respass, from Beaufort, affirmed; Morrissett vs. Cotton Mills, from Pasquotank, affirmed; Simmens vs. Respass, from Beaufort, affirmed; Baker vs. Brown, from Bertie, affirmed; Gaskins vs. Railroad, from Beaufort, action dismissed; White vs. Lipsitz, from Bertie, affirmed; Engle Company vs. Paschall, from Warren, affirmed; Forehead vs. Farmers and Merchants Bank, from Currituck, dismissed under rule No. 17; Smith, Courtney & Co. vs. Brown, from Beaufort, dismissed under rule No. 17.

Annie George, a young negro woman, was arrested by Policeman Causey last night, after a lively chase for snatching a pocketbook containing about $1 from the hands of W. G. Neal, a farmer who was spending the night in the city. Mr. Neal was talking to a friend on East Washington street, and was holding his pocketbook open in his hand preparatory to getting some money, when the George woman was passing by and is said to have snatched the purse from his hands. Policeman Causey happened to be near by and he was notified of the affair before the fleeing negro woman had gotten much of a start. A chase that finally terminated in the capture of the purse snatcher followed. The woman, however, led the officer a lively race up Davie and down Market to Greene, thence to the water tower, before she was finally captured and taken to the calaboose to await a hearing before Judge Eure. —Greensboro News.

At a meeting last night of the Wilmington Light Infantry a proposition from Goldsboro that the company retire from the Coast Artillery service and resume its former place in the State Guard in order that the Goldsboro organization might become a member of the Coast Artillery was thrashed out. There was a lengthy and spirited discussion pro and con. When the vote was taken it was shown that a majority of the members preferred not to return to the infantry. The Goldsboro company is anxious to enter the Coast Artillery service and as there was no vacancy in the number of companies constituting the service, a proposition was made to change with the W. L. I. The Goldsboro company will be notified of the action of the W. L. I. —Wilmington Star.

Jim McDodie, a young negro of this city, who may be classified as a professional in the chicken thieving line, if there is any such thing, was yesterday sent up to the road force to serve a sentence of twelve months from the Superior court, which is now in session in Tarboro. The negro, it seems, has a mania for stealing of fowls, and he has been up before the Recorder in this city on several occasions upon this charge, and he has been sent to the road force of the Rocky Mount Road District, where he has served a sentence of thirty days, but this did not cause him to change his way. The negro has confined his thieving mainly from the coops of the different stores of the city, that is so far as officers are aware, and he has been twice arrested for the robbery of the coop of G. F. Jones, though it was a taking of chickens from the coop of Gaston G. Levy & Bro. that caused him to receive a twelve months' sentence this time. —Rocky Mount Record.

The directors of The Home Building & Loan Association held their monthly meeting Tuesday afternoon. The quarterly report of the secretary and treasurer made at this meeting, showed that the association now has some over $50,000 out in loans, with applications pending for several thousand more. For an association three and a half years old, this is a good record. —Greenville Reflector.

NOT IN THE CATALOGUE

The reading room was as quiet as a tomb. New and then some students turned a page impatiently and the paper gave forth a sharp rustle as though aggrieved at such irreverent treatment, but visitors and attendants alike moved about with silent tread, rubber caps rendered chair legs noiseless when they were moved, and the very card-catalogue drawers moved on silent ways.

Linda loved this quiet. After the clatter and chatter of a busy office, which she had been compelled to escape because of nerves threatened to grow unruly, the bookish silence of the reading room was more than grateful. She was sorry when the closing hour came, and after a brief interval spent in checking up the slips and seeing that the books were replaced in their proper stacks, she had to go out into the turmoil of the busy street.

The quiet place was never lonesome. Linda had many friends among those quiet, studious men and women who spent their days pouring over the reference books. There was the little old woman from the costumers who spent days over old books in search of correct pictures of the dresses of by-gone days; there was the little old German who was reading everything he could find upon chemistry, and there was the tall, quiet man who displayed a singular catholicity of taste. One day it would be books on astronomy that he wanted, and again he would be interested in geography or chemistry.

Of them all this man Ballington was the most regular in his attendance, and seemed the most like an old friend. It was he who had quietly aided Linda with suggestions which she had first come to the room. He had been a "regular" and had known more of the routine than she did. But it was often that Linda was able to help him with a suggestion as to new book, for her heart was in her work and she was something more than an automaton, dealing out the books called for with mechanical indifference.

Ballington, Richard Ballington—she knew the name from his slip—seemed almost a part of the reading room itself, so regular was he in attendance and his good morning smile was a pleasant opening of the day's routine. Last Christmas he had brought a little gift the day before the holiday and sometimes, when luck was particularly good, a box of candy would come back with a book.

The summer before their vacations had overlapped and for an entire month she had not seen him. She was glad when the vacation was over and she could come back to her place at the desk with the beloved books around her and with Ballington sitting in the chair in a far corner where he was least likely to be disturbed.

For once Linda was glad as the hands of the clock crept around to closing time and she knew that in an hour more she would be free to hurry home and creep into bed. Just before the hands reached the closing hour Ballington rose from his place and brought a book to the desk. Then, instead of leaving, he went over to the catalogue and began to scan the cards in one of the drawers. For a few moments Linda watched him, then he looked up with the familiar glance of appeal and she came over to the catalogue drawer.

"Struck for a title?" she asked in a voice so low that it seemed scarcely to be a whisper. "What's the letter?"

"L," said Ballington. "Lo" to be exact.

"Logging?" she asked. "That's under lumber."

"Not logging," he denied. "It's a shorter word: 'Love.'"

"I don't think that's catalogued," she said in dismay. "It's a funny subject. Suppose we look for 'Romance'?"

"Let's look for romance, but not in books," he pleaded. "I know that this is a silly sort of proposal, but I love you, little girl. I've been sure of it ever since last summer, when I missed you for a whole month. Those two weeks when you were away I simply could not do any reading. I've been trying ever since to tell you, but I didn't see how I could want to hang around outside of the library until you come out, and I do want you to help me look for romance, Linda, even though it is not in the titles!"

"I think it is in the catalogue," she said, softly, "but if you'd rather, I'll help you after hours."

"There may be a romance in the catalogue," said Ballington, "but not as good a romance as there is in this moment just outside the drawers. You do care a little bit, Linda."

"Since last vacation," she admitted. "You may come this evening if you like—to begin the study."

Ballington made a note of her address and left the place with elastic step and beating heart, while Linda, went back to rectify the books the readers were returning. As she gave a final look around as the last book was stacked and the day's work done, she patted the catalogue cabinet as she passed it.

"You're awfully wise," she whispered, "with your thousands of titles, but you haven't a 'Love,' and I'm sorry for you." Then Linda walked out to enter a new world.
