COGITATIONS OF A BACHELOR-MAD.

When a man is something more than an animal and possesses the God-like gift of brains, he is either a coward or a blessing to women.

A woman is a being of many moods. She is a creature of many moods. She is a creature of many moods.

There is no use trying to make a man a woman's standard, and it does not much matter what standard they have.

There are two things about ordinary domestic housekeeping, especially in the country, that the wife should particularly look after: Good bread which is the mainstay of the family and vegetables which are easy to prepare.

With all her cold philanthropy, her formal religion, her tiresome dead-work, her labored charities—there is one spot in this woman's heart not quite covered by the armor of self-righteousness and formality—the loves her child.

Many a girl is too fond of freedom and pleasure to sacrifice herself early in life to matrimony. While it is easy to give money when you have it—it is hard for a good, honest girl to give herself—no matter how much she is in love, and how good and noble the man who loves her.

Who are the happiest individuals of our acquaintance? Those whose existence revolves in the smallest possible circle—men whose daily horizon is bounded by their dinner—women whose hopes extend not beyond their knitting needles?

Not many women can love with intensity, and when they do, almost invariably make some fatal mistake, whereby the wealth of their affection is wasted, or worse still, becomes a source of misery or shame to themselves and others.

Some women are impelled to an unaccountable antagonism against other women. They cannot understand why the latter like them—when there is no real sympathy between them. The latter is so wise and learned, that they never do wrong things from sudden irascible impulses, while the former are creatures of impulse.

While some women are neither intellectually nor morally strong, they have one reflex ingredient in their nature which is to them both a shield and spear. They know what they want, and are perfectly unscrupulous as to the means of getting.

There are women who have an enormous capacity for absorbing the marvelous, quite uninfluenced by the natural shrewdness with which they are in all ordinary matters. In a bright surface-way, they are clever and full of ideas—ideas which never fruitfully.

EYES, EARS, NOSE AND THROAT OF PUBLIC SCHOOL CHILDREN

Proper heights of seats and desks for different ages, as approved by the Boards of Health of New York and Chicago:
From 7 to 9 years, top of desk 23 inches, front of seat, 12 1-4 inches.
From 9 to 11 years, top of desk 24 inches, front of seat 12 3-4 inches.
From 12 to 14 years, top of desk 25 3-4 inches, front of seat 14 inches.
From 15 to 18 years, top of desk 27 1-2 inches, front of seat 15 1-4 inches.

An abundance of pure fresh air is of the greatest importance to the growing child. To secure this without draughts is the problem to be solved. The ideal solution for the country schoolhouse is obtained by the use of a jacketed stove and a ventilating flue in the same stack with the smoke-flue having an opening at the floor. The fresh air, conducted from outside by a tin pipe or wooden box, is introduced into the room through a hole in the floor immediately under the stove. The air as it passes between the hot stove and the jacket, which goes down to the floor all around and envelopes the stove quite closely, is warmed and poured into the room at the top. The increase in the air-pressure resulting therefrom forces the foul air out through the opening of the ventilating flue, which should be one foot from the floor and on the same side of the room as the stove. The outflow of foul air is increased if the ventilating flue is warmed by the smoke flue, which should be separated from the ventilating flue by the thinnest partition possible.

Such sanitary conveniences as are possible should always be provided, not only in the interest of health, but of economy and efficiency. A clean and comfortable room is a less expensive one than those whose habits are those of the wild animal.

To Test the Strength of the Eyesight. With pins or tacks fasten the open Bulletin on the School Health Bulletin No. 1. Fasten a wall in a room where light is abundant. Let the child stand at a distance of 20 feet from the Bulletin. Read the letters from the Bulletin. The lines on the card show the number of the line which the child can read. The number over each line of these test letters shows the distance in feet at which a normal eye ought to read the letters. The lines on the card are numbered from bottom to top 15, 20, 30, 40, etc., feet. The average normal eye should read the letters on the 20-foot line at a distance of 20 feet. If this can be done correctly, or with mistake in only one or two letters, the vision may be noted 20-20, or normal. The numerator of the fraction is the distance in feet at which the letters are read (every child being examined in the seat 20 feet away), and the denominator is the number over the smallest line of letters read. If the smallest letters that can be read are on the 30-foot line, the vision will be noted 20-30; if the letters on the 40-foot line are the smallest that can be read, the record will be 20-40; if the letters on the 50-foot line are the smallest that can be read, the record will be 20-50, etc.

sentence, such as "If good health brings happiness, you and I must have both." Vary the words and sentences to prevent memorizing.

In this way find out the farthest distance in feet at which the majority of the pupils can understand the whispers. Each pupil must be called away from the others to tell what was heard, so they may not hear the report given.

This distance we shall call that for the normal ear.

Now test all pupils separately. Find out the distance at which the same whispered words and sentences can be understood under the same conditions.

The first distance you will use as the numerator of a fraction for every pupil examined, and the distance at which each particular pupil understands will be the denominator. For example, if 10 feet is the distance at which most of the pupils heard the whispers, and 5 feet, or 2 feet, is the distance at which a particular pupil hears them; the test will be indicated thus, 10-5, or 10-2.

From this record the teacher will be able to tell whether or not the pupil ought to have the attention of a physician.

Does the pupil complain of ear-ache from time to time? Does matter (pus) or a foul odor come from either ear? Or is the pupil a mouth-breather? If so, do not fail to take notice of the condition.

Notify Parents and Guardians. If it appears from examination that a pupil needs the attention of the family physician or a specialist, the teacher should not hesitate to notify the parents or guardian. There is nothing obligatory in the nature of the warning cards. They do not require anything. They simply give warning that a probable disease exists, thus placing the responsibility where it belongs. Those in charge of the pupil are at liberty to take notice of the warning or not, as they may see fit.
